A Visitor's Experience.

C. W. Lyon of Pittsfield, Mass., who is in town for a few days, met with a peculiar accident Sunday. Together with some friends he went to Tier's ice-cream place at the lake house. While walking about the yard, he stepped on a board, which gave way, and he fell into a large hole half full of water, which had formerly been used as a well. With the assistance of friends, he was helped out of the excavation, and though there was no serious damage Mr. Lyons sustained a severe shock.

Incentive to Merit Among Animals.

The existence of a cat show in New York moves the Tribune to remark: It seems such a pity that the animals that take prizes in shows never know that they take them. When a horse is racing he knows that he is trying to get ahead of some other horse. When he has got ahead of the other horse he knows that he has got ahead of him, and when he has won the race who shall say that he does not know that he has won it, or that he does not feel the same pride and satisfaction in it as his owner and his jockey? But when a horse or a dog or a cat is put in a row with a hundred other horses or dogs or cats at the Madison Square Garden, what does he care whether there is a red ticket or a blue ticket nailed to the back of his box? There may be one compensation—if the animals that take prizes feel no satisfaction, those that fail to take them feel no disappointment.

Given a Chance to Fatten.

Thomas P. Wall, who wanted to be a sweeper in the New York Street Cleaning Department, but was rejected by the examining physician because he didn't weigh enough, appealed to erratic Col. Waring.

"I used to weigh 145 pounds," he said, "but for several months I have been out of work and I haven't had enough to eat. Now I weigh only 119."

"Well," said Waring, "I'll appoint you, and let you earn enough money to fatten yourself up. But if you don't reach the proper condition within a reasonable time I'll have to lay you off, and you cannot complain if I do."

Wall promised to do his best.

A Worthy Monument.

The decision of the Rumford Historical Society of Woburn, Mass., to erect a monument on the farm where the Baldwin apple was discovered, nearly a hundred years ago, is in every way commendable. The estate which, through the medium of a sturdy native stock and cross fertilization by a beneficent bumblebee, gave birth to a new and superior apple is worthy of a monument.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

AS DESCRIBED BY A DAUGHTER OF BRIGHAM YOUNG.

She Pleads for an Equality of the Sexes and Holds that Boys Should be Taught to Do the Dishes and Girls to Milk Cows.

At the recent session in Washington of the National Council of Women Susa Young Gates, of Utah, a daughter of Brigham Young, read a paper on "What is Modern Education Doing for American Girls." She said, in part:

"Fifty, 100, yea, 1,000 years ago, no thought save that of dependence ever entered into the ideal life of woman. The clinging vine was the accepted standard of womanliness. The ideal of our girl to-day is the exact opposite. From utter dependence she has emerged to a too complete independence. Girl bachelors are as plentiful as the male bachelors. The fin de siecle girl is loath to give up her cozy rooms in her luxurious flat or her tiny cottage home, shared, no doubt, by a companion of her own sex and of similar tastes, to take upon herself the heavy burdens of housework and home management. She is positively determined that she will not allow herself to become the mother of children. The reproach of old maidenhood has so far receded into the past, and the selfish serving of selfish wants has so far spread from masculinity to femininity that the cities are even more crowded with young women from city and country who refuse to marry than they are with young men who share with them these egotistic views.

"What is the effect, physically, of modern education upon our girls? Who that meets the pink-cheeked lassie upon her wheel or visits the popular gymnasium, that shares with our summer girl her climbs and mountain junketings; who gazes upon the sparkling eyes and rosy lips of the country girl, or her prudent city cousin, who has utilized all the modern health promoting methods, will deny that physically our once thin, pale and delicate girl is improving? There is still great need of improvement. The physical status of women to-day is so low that motherhood is almost, if not quite, an impracticability. Witness the flat chested and poorly developed body, be she rich or poor, country born or city bred, who tread the halls of our Eastern schools and colleges. The occasional well developed and round-limbed girl is sure to be only one generation removed from the mother's European home, or she has been reared on a Western farm and has not had higher educational advantages or disadvantages.

"There are always in every condition of life a majority of good women. The girl of to-day is uncertain what she will be—what she wants to be spiritually. She is not at all uncertain about her determination to grasp every opportunity which comes near her for physical and mental independence, nor is she uncertain as to her willingness to accept the council of her senior and avoid all possibility of material worry and care; she is even mildly willing to remain single and free to pursue her own selfish course, for it is the spirit of the age. Nothing but an overpowering impulse of the divine passion can influence her to marry, and even then she will so catechise herself and her lover that it requires all her own peculiar tact to make him or even herself forget that she is giving much to receive little.

"Physically a girl should be guarded between the ages of 10 and 16 from severe mental strain and from the mischievous principle of emulation used to stimulate our school children. The girl's life should be spent principally out of doors, and in midwinter or in large cities she should be much of her time gently exercising in a scientifically conducted gymnasium. Indeed, why should there not be institutes for girls, something after the plan of the Pratt Institute of Brooklyn, the Armour of Chicago and the Drexel of Philadelphia? Why should not such an institute be so arranged that the girls and boys shall attend together? Will not as many boys turn out excellent milliners as there will be girls who can administer medicine or plan a house? Why must we go thinking that it is right for women to do men's work, but it will never do for men to choose the occupations now monopolized by women?

"And if such a revolution is pending, I prophesy that there will be as many mild mannered men who will cling lovingly for support to the future architect or cabinetmaker as there are now depending upon the wife's washing or following women lecturers from pillar to post.

"Some noble hearted women are freely devoting life, time, money and influence to converting other women's sons and husbands to the necessity of equal suffrage and equal privileges for the sexes. I am practically educating my boys to understand and share in the problems and wearisome cares of the household. I am not afraid that in their manhood they will fail to insist upon my sharing with them the responsibilities and honors of town, State and nation.

"Numbers of alert Western mothers, who share with me these views, are so training their children that while the boys are ofttimes happily engaged in washing dishes, their sisters are out in the open air milking the cows, bringing in the coal and chopping up the kindling wood. No matter what the effect of this interchange of work may have upon the boy, it will certainly strengthen the body of our girl and make her more able to bear future mental and physical strain."

HEBER NEWTON'S NEW HERESY.

His Recent Utterance About the Resurrection Stirs the Church.

While clergymen in general, as well as laymen, have been discussing the sermon delivered by the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, at the All Souls' Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, in which he discarded the prevalent belief of the Church in the actual resurrection of the body of Jesus Christ, the words of the clergyman in question have been quietly weighed by a commission appointed to ascertain whether there was sufficient evidence of uncanonical practices on his part to warrant placing him on trial for heresy. These last utterances of Dr. Newton which have caused so much comment have proved to be valuable data for the commission in its labors, and now there is no doubt that Dr. Newton will be speedily called to account for alleged heresy.

The commission which is investigating Dr. Newton's case dates back to 1891. The following part of Dr. Newton's sermon is the basis on which the evidence swings, and that expressing, as it does in brief, the whole creed voiced by Dr. Newton, it will be relied on for a decision. The portion is as follows:

"What are we to understand by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead? What the Church understands is plain. Without doubt the general belief is that there was a physical resurrection—a rising from the tomb of the very body of flesh and bones which was laid away there after the crucifixion. I have held to its belief as long as possible, but no superstructure can forget its foundation, and my reasons for rejecting this belief I propose to tell you. We know now from our fuller knowledge of the times of Jesus Christ that the people and His disciples themselves believed not only in immortality, but in an actual physical resurrection. I cannot accept the testimony of the disciples. And there is the fact that no one saw Him in the act of rising from the tomb and passing forth in the same identical form of His earthly body * * *

"I am frank to say that for one I do not believe the resurrection of Jesus Christ means the rising again from the tomb of the actual body laid away there. The Church undoubtedly believes it, and its authority is no higher than the authority of the disciples."

PULLMAN NOT A MODEL TOWN.

Clergymen Report that the Poor Live in Brick Sheds at $8 Per Month.

The Chicago committee of clergymen, as a result of their investigation at Pullman, recommend a monster entertainment as the means of securing funds to colonize 150 families who must leave the town.

Rev. Mr. Mitchell said: "The company absolutely refused to contribute one cent. Not only that, but our investigation revealed the fact that the money raised by the Hussars some time ago to help deport Pullman people fell into the hands of the company."

"Pullman is not the model town one is asked to believe it is," said Dr. Rusk. "It is a whitened sepulcher, filled with dead men's bones. Without it is fair to look at, but after you pass the imposing front there is much to be condemned. We went through the alleged model flats, and found that a ramshackle affair on the top floor rented for $23. Why, in the sheds at the brick yards, which the company denies are used as habitations, the squalid creatures who inhabit them showed us rent receipts for $8 a month, signed by the Pullman Company."

HOMELESS HETTY GREEN.

She Disputes the Personal Tax Levied on Her in New York.

Hetty Green, accompanied by two lawyers, Wheeler H. Peckham and Smith E. Lane, and by two stenographers, went before the tax commissioners to contest her assessment for 1895 on $1,500,000 of personal property. One of the stenographers, she said, was to be a check upon the other, so that she might be sure of an accurate report.

Mrs. Green's contention was that she did not live in New York. If she had any home, she said, it was at Bellows Falls, Vt., although she did not live there, and when there put up at a hotel. She enumerated the places in this city where she had lived during the last year, and declared that in all but one she had been a visitor, and had paid no board. She had boarded for sixteen days at 16 East Forty-seventh street.

"Where did you stay last night?" asked Mr. Dean.

"At the Hotel St. George, in Brooklyn," she answered. "I have paid my bill there, and I don't know where I shall go to-night. Couldn't you find me a place, Mr. Dean?"

The amount of the tax which Mrs. Green is trying to avoid is something under $30,000. The commissioners reached no decision on her application.

A Long Time Dead.

At Dashour, twenty miles south of Cairo, the graves of two princesses of the twelfth Dynasty, more than 4,000 years ago, were discovered intact a little while ago. The coffins had decayed and the mummies crumbled to dust as soon as an attempt was made to remove them, but on the head of each was a golden coronet looking as fresh as the day it was made.

One was a wreath of forget me nots with Maltese crosses at intervals made of precious stones; the other coronet contained a socket in which was inserted a spray of flowers made of jewelry, with leaves and stems of gold. Besides these there were necklaces, bracelets, armlets, anklets, daggers and charms.—American.

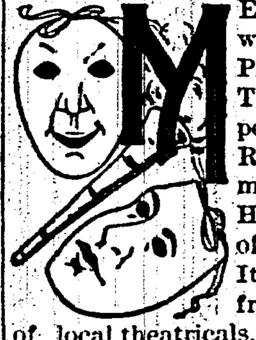
A RUSSIAN HONEYMOON

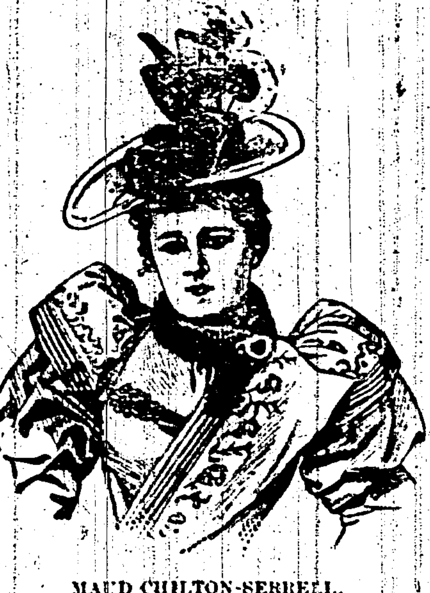
Successful Attempt at Melodrama by Amateurs.

LOCAL DEBUT OF MISS COOLEY.

Relief Fund Materially Benefits by an Excellent Theatrical Production—Mrs. Serrell and Other Favorites Interpret Difficult Roles.



MELODRAMA was well essayed by Plainfield amateurs Thursday in the performance of "A Russian Honeymoon" in Music Hall for the benefit of the Relief Fund. It was a departure from the old lines of local theatricals, and the change was refreshing. "A Russian Honeymoon" is listed as a comedy, and there is plenty of laugh in it; but threats of the knout, and shattered love, and divorce, are no joke, and the dramatic force that abounds in the action of the piece makes the title comedy a misnomer. It was gratifying to admirers of the talent of the players to find them bending their energies to something more substantial than weak drawing-room pictures and trifling dialogues. "A Russian Honeymoon" has color and life, and like most good plays is from the French.



MAUD CHILTON-SERRELL.

The part of wisdom was played by the management in the selection of Music Hall as the theatre. The night was hot, and for the 600 ticket-holders to attempt crowding into the Casino would have been somewhat fatiguing. As it was, all were moderately comfortable, and were glad they came. Nobody was sent away and asked to come to the "next" performance.

Effectively staged and well acted was the play. James Stowell Anthony, under whose painstaking management the enterprise became a success, had neglected no detail; and with the able assistance of George Percy Taggart, to whom he expressed his indebtedness, he presented a smooth and finished performance.

The story of the piece has already been outlined in these columns, and those who saw the tale so vividly pictured last night need no reminder of its plot. It is "The Taming of the Shrew" over again, built on different lines.

In the dual role of Shoemaker Alexis and Count Woroffski, Constantine P. Ralli had need of the brilliancy and polish and adaptability which are his by nature. His ease, his grace, his handsome presence and fine bearing, made him a marked figure; and what woman, though of temper never so ill, could have withstood his ardent wooing, his unfailing good nature and breeding, his gentleness and his manly suffering? The requirements of the character were a highborn bearing, a voice of richness, sympathy and power, a readiness in the arts of love and mastery, and a big heart. Having these it was easy and natural for Mr. Ralli to develop fully the sentiment and power of his somewhat romantic part.

Mrs. L. W. Serrell, Jr., who as Miss Maude James Chilton was an amateur of note, is at home on the stage; and gave a polished picture of the Baroness Vladimir. Her personal charms, her exquisite toilette, were accentuated by her Parisian manners, her vivacious gaiety, and the infectious charm of her merry laughter. She had far better opportunity for advantageous work than in the immortal "Tea at Five o'Clock", and her performance was genuinely superb.

A master of stagecraft is W. R. Cock. As the shoemaker-philosopher he had scope for his abilities. It was not his proverbs that so much delighted, though they were good; but it was the humor and honest ruggedness of his personality, and his inimitable ability to impersonate strong and peculiar character, that made him a humorous and admirable eccentricity.

One's first appearance before a home audience is a hard test, and well Miss Grace W. Cooley stood it. Hers was a trying role, that of Poleska, the wife who needed taming, and whose spirit was finally broken by her genuine love for the royal husband who so severely tried her. Whether stately, or imperious, or passionate, or hysterical, or devoted, she threw herself fully into the part, and rendered her lines and action with a vigor and ability than won marked favor. The climaxes were hard, and a task for more experienced hands; but Miss Cooley met them with determination, and yet skilfully avoided straining too much after effect. She proved herself deserving of rank among local amateurs. Fred W. Walz was afforded more scope that in parts hitherto assigned to him, and he did some mighty good acting under a very clever makeup. He has developed strongly since previous appearances.

Miss Caroline F. Randolph has the natural elements that attract, sprightliness, girlishness, and a merry and womanly heart. Her unaffected charm in the role of the shoemaker's daughter won more hearts than that of her pouting peasant-lover, a part which Howard Huntington had the good fortune to play, and to play well.

The cast was augmented by peasants, guards, and other people, impersonated by members of the special chorus drilled by W. E. MacClymont for the occasion, and by the Third Regiment Cadet Corps. The singers were: Soprano — Miss Catherine Glenn, Mrs. W. E. MacClymont, Miss Sadie Keenan, Miss Nora Williams, Miss Elizabeth Bittenbender, Miss Elma Runyon; alto — Miss Lottie Messersmith, Miss Mabel Force, Miss Beatrice Miner, Miss Fansy Herring; tenor—George O. Stevens, Robert Clark, Edward Clark, Charles Angleman, Willard Miner; bass—Harry Williams, Arthur Freeman, John Peck, Fred Pope. And the soldiers: Captain — George F. Edwards; First Sergeant — George P. Bull; Privates—E. L. Bull, V. F. Green, Harold Hart, C. P. Lord, H. C. Miller, George P. Smith, E. I. Serrell, W. W. West.

The orchestral music was excellent, conducted by Eugene Rose. The audience was spontaneous and vigorous with its applause, and repeatedly called the performers before the curtain. Everybody staid seated at the close of the play, and the hand-clapping was such an outburst that the players had again to reappear and bow their acknowledgements. Huge bouquets were passed up to the women of the cast, with such prodigality that they could not carry them

LADIES CHRISTIAN WORK.

Interesting and Profitable Celebration of the Fourteenth Anniversary.

The pulpit platform of Trinity Reformed Church was graced with flowers last Sunday in honor of the fourteenth anniversary of the Ladies Christian Work Society, and a good-sized audience enjoyed the celebration.

The annual reports of the society, showing a gratifying record of work and progress, were read by Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor, as follows:

SECRETARY'S ANNUAL REPORT.

The Ladies Christian Work Society of Trinity Reformed Church has the honor to present its fourteenth annual report. We feel that the Lord has prospered us in our undertakings, and thank Him most heartily for the strength He has given us to carry out His work.

The meetings of this society have been held once a month, and have been well attended. Immediately after the election of officers last May the following committees were appointed: Missionary, poor, visiting, sewing, temperance, flower, and sinking fund.

The Missionary Committee collected during the year $75.30, which was equally divided between the foreign and domestic boards. A special collection of $17.65 was given to the Thiampo and Kanipet mission in China. In November, a box containing new and partially worn clothing, bedding, canned fruit, etc., valued at $130, of which the King's Daughters contributed $16, was sent to Rev. Mr. Heysenger and family at Rock Valley, Iowa, and a letter of very grateful thanks received from Mrs. Heysinger gave the society cause to think it was more blessed to give than to receive. The Visiting Committee have been engaged in visiting the sick, also in welcoming the new members to our church, and we feel that they have worked most faithfully.

Sewing meetings have been well attended, and aside from being social gatherings, have proved both good and profitable.

At the last anniversary of this society Mrs. E. B. Horton of Cranford gave a stereopticon lecture in the church. The amount of the collection was $20.04. In March Miss M. A. Duryee of Newark, secretary of misson work in China, gave a talk on mission work which proved very beneficial to the society. The collection amounting to $6.25 was donated to foreign missions.

The membership of this society is 55, the average attendance 27. Seven new members have joined in the past year, and one has withdrawn.

The angel of death has been among us, and taken away three of our honored members: Mrs. Garretson, who after months of suffering fell asleep; Miss Vandenburgh, who, while in active service, was suddenly called to her heavenly home; and Mrs. Fine, who after much suffering also was called away.

While we feel our loss most deeply, we would not forget to bow in humble submission to the will of the Most High, for He doeth all things well. Mrs. A. L. Marshall, Secretary.

Mrs. Henry VanName,
Treasurer.

The address of the evening was by Rev. A. DeWitt Mason of New York. He commended the earnestness and zeal of the society as evidenced by the reports read, and called them a band of earnest and consecrated women. Their constitution, he saw, planned their work as social, evangelistic and missionary; and he recommended that they adapt themselves to the work they represented, by being guided by God at all times and under all circumstances.

The element of sociability he held to be woman's sphere; it was in their power to direct and purify the social life as no one could do. God had given into their hands the power to uplift. Each woman should go to her own home first, and christianize it, and then go out into the world and spread the work.

Hearty greeting of the stranger who comes into the church, was advised; greet him cordially—said the preacher—and show that you want him there; make him feel perfectly at home.

In the department of evangelism and missions he urged the seeking out of the unconverted and the bringing of them into the church. Visit the sick,—he said—assist them with your prayers, and show them your desire to help them physically and spiritually. The great work that women do in the slums, he highly commended, and said "God bless the women for the work they do for God!"

Two thoughts came to him in connection with the society—adaptability and reward. Adaptability implies responsibility. You are responsible for anything you can do, and God holds you responsible for all you are adapted for. Reward, he illustrated by the parable of the talents, and held the salvation of souls to be the only thing worth working for. It was a sublime thing to be continually doing the will of God.

Glowingly he depicted the last review at Washington, after the war, when horses and men were gay with the garlands of victory. How little the joy of that day—he said—compared to yours at the gates of the great celestial city, when you win your reward as a result of having discharged your duties aright.

Pastor Schenck warmly thanked Mr. Mason for his address.

LIGHTNING STRIKES.

Lightning played pranks in North Plainfield Saturday afternoon. The heavy clap heard all over Plainfield was deafening in Washington Park and vicinity, and residents were greatly frightened. The bolt struck a 40-foot tulip tree in the yard owned by Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Sr., and adjoining her home on Sycamore avenue. It tore off a limb, loosened the bark all around the tree, and made four distinct holes in the earth at the base. The tree was nearly ready to bloom in its usual splendor, and was the pride of its owner's heart.

Lightning struck a tree back of the house of C. W. McCutchen, causing much fright, and shocking John Case and John Bodine, carpenters, who were at work in the barn, but doing no damage. Mr. McCutchen's house was struck by lightning some years ago.

The lightning rang the indicator in Warren engine-house, and also so affected a portion of the borough street lights that darkness prevailed all Saturday night.

MRS. POWELL PRESIDENT

WOMEN ORGANIZE IN PLAINFIELD.

Most of the Offices Are Held Locally, and This City Promises to Be the Centre of a Great Equal-Rights Movement.

After luncheon and a time of social hat Friday afternoon, the State Woman Suffrage Association resumed their annual meeting, the morning session of which was recorded exclusively in The Daily Press of yesterday.

The first speaker of the afternoon was Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell of Elizabeth, who was an intimate friend of Lucy Stone, remembered as the woman whose personal property was seized by the tax officials because she refused to pay taxes on the ground that it was taxation without representation, the right of voting being denied her.

Mrs. Blackwell made a vigorous address and argument for the extension of the ballot to her sex. She said that years ago there was an organic law in New Jersey, which gave women the right to vote. Afterwards a Legislature took away this right, and then formulated a new constitution, which she characterized as a fraud, and, she added, the women of New Jersey repudiated it. She considered that there was no boundary nor limit to woman's suffrage—that if she had the right to vote at school elections and to hold school offices she should be privileged to the other rights. The law giving the mother the same right over the child as the father, and that granting her the qualification of property-holding, were acts that had only been procured by the ceaseless agitation and effort of women. Equality was all that women asked for.

Mrs. David P. Hall of Plainfield was in favor of making a direct argument for the fullest privileges of suffrage. She did not want to see the real object obscured for the sake of gaining a point on some opponent.

Mrs. Isaac L. Miller of this city argued for equal rights because she believed under the present state of affairs it was taxation without representation.

Rev. Hobart Clark was called on, and addressed the fair audience, at first as "would-be fellow-citizens", and then changed it "to-be fellow-citizens", which of course displayed his position on the question. He thought that if a few hundred thousand women could be exchanged for a few hundred thousand men, and reverse their conditions, leaving the rest of the people as they are, a great deal of good could be gained for reform.

At the conclusion of Mr. Clark's remarks the Union County Woman's Suffrage Association was formed, with the following officers:

President, Mrs. Anna Rice Powell of Plainfield; vice president, Mrs. Antoinette Brown Blackwell of Elizabeth; corresponding secretary, Miss Eaton of Plainfield; recording secretary, Mrs. D. W. Pond of Plainfield; treasurer, Mrs. Samuel Huntington of Plainfield; auditing committee, Mrs. Child of Elizabeth and Mrs. L. V. F. Randolph of Plainfield.

THE HUSBAND OBJECTS.

After His Wife Has Been Two Years Away, He Arrests Her and Her Star Boarder.

John McGowan and Julia Sneider of South Second street were arrested Friday afternoon by Chief Grant on a warrant issued by Justice Nash, on the complaint of Mrs. Sneider's husband, who does'n't like the way his wife bestows favors on McGowan.

Sneider lives at Scotch Plains and alleges that his spouse left him nearly two years ago and has since lived with McGowan as his wife.

The woman claimed that McGowan was only a boarder at her house. The evidence presented, however, was sufficient to warrant the justice in committing the prisoners to the county jail, in default of $250 bail, to await the action of the grand jury.

SPRING CONFERENCE.

E. E. Anthony of Plainfield Elected Union County President—Roselle Gets the Banner.

The Spring Conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union held in Elizabeth Thursday was the most successful the Union ever had. The meetings were in the First Baptist Church. In the afternoon the Junior rally was held, and fully 500 children participated. They marched into the church singing "We Are Juniors". John M. Dudley of Elizabeth led the army of little singers. The procession moving through the aisles made a brilliant and inspiring spectacle. Rev. W. E. Staub, pastor of the church, made an address of welcome, and Rev. A. W. Spooner of Camden, the State Junior Superintendent, spoke on "The Children in the Church at Work".

Led by Mrs. L. D. Williams of Elizabeth, the children rendered the committee exercise illustrating the methods of junior work. At the roll call each society responded by singing two verses of a hymn.

Mrs. W. S. Lowry of Plainfield, County Superintendent, was present.

In the evening the Senior societies crowded the church, and an enthusiastic meeting, with the theme "Christian Citizenship", was the result. Rev. W. Justin Harsha of Harlem made the address, and Rev. Geo. H. Payson of Rahway conducted a parliament.

Secretary Wilson reported 82 societies in the County, 34 being juniors, and the total membership 3,912. The department plan of work was reported as having been very successful. High credit was given to Mrs. W. S. Lowry of Plainfield for her work in the junior department.

The badge banner for the society having the largest percent of members was presented to the Roselle Baptist Church Society.

Both the Union County and the Elizabeth unions elected officers as follows:

Union County—President, E. E. Anthony of Plainfield; vice-presidents, H. D. Wilson, Elizabeth; William Milliken, Dunellen; R. H. Tice, Roselle; secretary, A. B. Wilson, Rahway; treasurer, J. Warren Brown, Westfield.

Elizabeth — President, E. W. T. Faint, East Baptist society; vice presidents, Miss Clara Walferz, German Moravian society, and Miss Grace Candee, Madison Avenue Presbyterian society; secretary, W. Clifford Willis, Second Presbyterian Church; treasurer, James W. Long, Connecticut Farms Presbyterian Church.

Happily Surprised.

A very pleasant surprise party was given Miss Edith Robinson of West Third street by her friend, Miss Bertha Mitchell, Wednesday afternoon May 8, from 4 until 7.

The time was passed in playing games, etc., after which the company repaired to the lawn, where a most delicious repast was served; more games were indulged in, and a most delightful afternoon was brought to a close by a dance around the May pole and the crowning of the young hostess Queen of May.

Just what a new dress is to a woman a new dress of type is to a newspaper; and The Daily Press congratulates the embellished Courier-News on its improved good looks.

[From The Courier-News, May 10.]

Following the example of the Courier-News the Daily Press is to make its appearance in a new dress of type. It will be noticed that the North avenue paper always attempts to follow the lead of the Courier-News. The Courier-News put in the first newspaper folder ever used in Plainfield. The Press followed suit a long time afterwards. The Courier-News changed to an eight page paper. The Press followed suit. All of which goes to prove what we have so often said—that the Courier-News leads and all others follow—at a distance.

PETITION FOR THE EXTENSION.

Borough Council Hears the Plea and Sets June 7 as the Date for Advocates and Objectors to Be Heard.

An adjourned session of the North Plainfield Borough Council was held Friday night. Mayor Hegeman called the meeting to order, and all the members responded to the roll call except Mr. Lounsbury. The pay roll for the week ending May 10, amounting to $155, was presented, and later in the evening ordered paid.

Warren Engine Company submitted for confirmation the list of officers recently elected, as published in The Daily Press at the time. It was referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

Mr. Valiant stated that he had received a letter from Borough Counsel Reed in regard to the claim of H. R. Munger for damages, and his opinion was that the owner of the dogs should pay for the killing of the chickens. The report was received and filed.

Mrs. Smith of the Committee on Streets and Public Health reported that the amount of money solicited among residents of Harrison street was not sufficient, and the petition had been sent back to them. He also reported that work had been started on Mountain avenue, but that the condition of the thoroughfare was so bad that he preferred to ask the consent of the Council before finishing it, which would cost about $250. The request was granted on motion of Mr. Schutt, and the report was received and filed.

A petition was read by Clerk Arnold from residents in the borough, owning one fourth lineal feet frontage on the land for the proposed extension of Watchung avenue, asking that the proposed extension be laid out, and graded in proper form, from Jackson avenue to Green brook. It was signed by the following petitioners: Ferdinand Strauss, Mary McGlone, Mary Elizabeth Mayer, Thomas C. Bird, Elias H. Bird, Fanny Anderson, Francis Conshea, Seyrinthia McDonald; legatees of Werner Heidloff, namely: John J. Heidloff, Nicholas H. Heidloff; Anna E. Crum, Deney C. Horton, Nathaniel Taynor, Patrick Daley, George Taynor, Lewis Bird, Fred Becker, Harriet Richardson, Thomas Rutledge, George White, William E. Johnson, St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Mary E. Schenck, and Emil Messerschmidt.

Mr. Schutt offered a resolution, that due notice be given by the Clerk, by posters, to those wishing to object to the proposed extension, and that June 7 be set as the time for public hearing of the case. This was adopted.

The Council then adjourned.

Handsome and Unique.

Great improvements are in contemplation at the old established Plainfield Pharmacy of H. P. Reynolds, and the plans now under consideration are likely to be consummated in the Fall.

The changes are such as are likely to make this one of the handsomest and certainly the most unique of drugstores in the State, and include extension of the store to the rear, the establishment of a cozy reception room with elegant mantels and blazing firelogs where the prescription department now stands, and the removal of the prescription department to the side of the store, more room to be made by the removal of a side partition and the utilization of the room under the main stairway of the building.

"HEY, BILL!"

But Bill Refused to Get Up, and This Made the Yeller Mad.

A few evenings ago the residents living in the vicinity of Duer and Emily streets were awakened from sound sleep by some individual, evidently inebriated, standing in front of a house and yelling in vociferous tones "Hey, Bill!" in his endeavor to awaken the occupants and gain admittance to the domicile. But the occupants either slept sounder than their neighbors, or else did not care to admit the man.

The longer he yelled, the madder he got, until his talk finally terminated in profanity, at which several ghost-like apparitions appeared at windows to see what occasioned the rumpus.

The yeller yelled a half hour till he was hoarse, and then went away yelling. Then people in that section went to sleep.

To Play With Somerville.

Robert and John McLaughlin, the crack ball players of this city, will form the battery for the Somerville baseball team this season, and will play for the first time Saturday afternoon, when they will meet the City of New York College team. John McLaughlin will also play with the local Y. M. C. A. team when opportunity affords.

BANKRUPTED AUDIENCE.

Jolly Good Times Enjoying Congregational Hard Times.

The hard times are over, judging from the costumes worn at the Hard Times Social in the Congregational Church last Friday. There were some who followed out the spirit of the occasion, but the rest delighted the fine-collectors with their silk dresses, jewelry, white shirts, and blacked boots. The invitations were printed on brown paper, and announced fines for all sorts of costumes.

The congregation turned out in good numbers, and in a variety of dress. Silks and calicoes were alternated, and merry chatter and bright laughter animated a picturesque scene. Among those whose costumes were especially "in ye spirit of ye hard times" were Miss Harriet E. Delano, Mrs. Charles L. Goodrich, Mrs. Fuller, Mrs. Harold Tomlinson, Mrs. F. F. Clark, Joseph Robinson, George Rose, Robert Suffren, Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, Harold Tomlinson, and Wyatt Barnes.

After all had admired their neighbors' costumes, and laughed over the numerous patches, "ye church quire" rendered the selection "Striking the Cymbal". The choir was composed of Miss Eda Beekman, Miss M. G. Morse, Miss Julia Belknap, Miss Capitola Conover, Horace J. Martin, John Burnett, Charles Belknap and Stacy R. Raynolds. Ode to Science" was the next selection, after which Miss Nellie Winckler played a piano solo. "Old Folks at Home", as a solo and chorus, was sung by Miss M. G. Morse, assisted by the rest of the choir. The programme concluded with "Auld Lang Syne", and the "vittles" were served according to the following menu: Kows milke solid, kakes, sanwiches, kophe, lemunaid: all of wich may be bort fur 25 sents; any of ye vittles omitted on ye order, will be 5 sents extry.

Rev. C. L. Goodrich was superintendent of collecting, and was ably assisted in bankrupting the audience by Mrs. Geo. S. Raynolds, Miss Adelade Parsons, Miss Mary Robinson, John Burnett and Joseph Robinson. The door was in charge of Charles Belknap.

The refreshments formed a field of much enjoyment, and the waiters were kept busy attending to the wants of all. The waiters were: Miss Edna Howell, Miss Winckler, Miss Nellie Winckler, Miss Capitola Conover, George Fuller, Charles B. Morse, and Stacy R. Raynolds.

The eatables were arranged and dealt out by the following committee: Mrs. B. T. Barnes, chairman, Mrs. Lloyd Fuller, Mrs. William Van Alstyne, Mrs. L. H. Morgan, Mrs. C. E. Boss, Mrs. Eugene Laing, Mrs. E. L. Suffren, and Mrs. Henry Nomer.

The committee in charge of the decorations consisted of Mrs. C. L. Goodrich, chairman, Mrs. John Burnett, and Miss Eda Beekman. Charles Steiner acted as cashier in the refreshment department. Miss Mary Chase presided over the lemonade table where lemonade was for sale during the evening.

Mrs. M. E. Dwight was the chairman of the committee to provide the entertainment, and succeeded admirably.

The sociable was given by the Ladies Aid Society to aid the carpet fund, and during the evening over $25 was cleared.

Mrs. B. T. Barnes was chairman of the Social Committee, and great credit is due to her and her corps of willing assistants for the delightful evening that was enjoyed and the smooth manner in which everything proceeded.

Soon after 11, the gathering disbanded, and all declared it a most delightful evening.

Serious Fire Narrowly Averted.

The oil inside of a hanging lamp in the house of E. J. Richards, corner of West Fourth and Liberty streets, became ignited Saturday night and in the attempt to throw it out doors the fluid spread over and set fire to the piazza. By quick action the flames were extinguished and a serious conflagration averted.

Fined by the Marshal.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

MADE FIRST CONSUL OF FRANCE.

Causes Which Led to His Rapid Ascendency—Coup of Brumaire—Passage of the Alps and Battle of Marengo—Moreau Victorious on the Field of Hohenlinden.

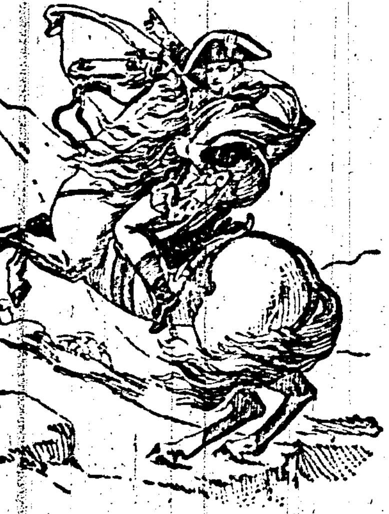
[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XIII.—Brumaire and the Recovery of Italy.

For four years and four days the administration of the government of France was in the hands of the Directory. That body was a plural executive. The sanguinary Republic of 1793 had sought to transform itself, under the guillotine, into a Republic of moderation; and the administrative power was assigned to a Council of Five. The vice of the new system was the want of executive unity; for how could five men think and act as one?

Many members of this quintuple presidency had been of the Jacobin order. Of this kind was Barras. Others were patriots and men of character. Such were Rewbell, La Reveillere-Lepeaux, Le Tourneur, Carnot, Barthelemy, Roger-Ducos, and in particular the Abbe Sieyes—greatest of them all. In such a body contrarious counsels were always uppermost; and there was a consequent want of decision and force in the government.

This condition led to the deplorable reverses which overtook the French armies during the absence of Bonaparte in Egypt. Thiers says that the Directorial Republic exhibited at this time a scene of distressing confusion. He adds: "The Directory gave up guillotining; it only transported. It ceased to force people to take assignats upon pain of death; but it paid nobody. Our soldiers, without arms and without bread, were beaten instead of being victorious."



NAPOLEON CROSSING THE ALPS.

The ambition of Napoleon found in this situation a fitting opportunity. The Directors were Sieyes, Barras, Ducos, Moulins and Gohier. The legislative branch of the government consisted of a Senate, or Council of Ancients, and a Council of Five Hundred. The latter constituted the popular branch. Of this body Lucien Bonaparte, brother of the General, was president. Hardly had Napoleon arrived in the capital when a conspiracy was formed by him with Sieyes, Lucien, and others of revolutionary disposition, to do away by a coup with the too democratic system, and to replace it with a stronger and more centralized order. The Council of Ancients was to be brought around by the influence of Sieyes. To Lucien Bonaparte the more difficult task was assigned of controlling and revolutionizing the Assembly. As for Napoleon, Sieyes procured for him the command of the military forces of Paris; and by another decree the sittings of the two legislative councils were transferred to St. Cloud.

The 18th Brumaire of the Year VIII., corresponding to the 9th of November, 1799, was fixed as the day for the revolution. To Napoleon the crisis was an epoch of fate. The conspiracy embraced the resignation of Sieyes, Barras and Ducos, which—coming suddenly on the appointed morning—broke up the Directory. Bonaparte then put out his hand as commander of the troops. Too late the Republicans of the Council of Five Hundred felt the earthquake swelling under their feet. Napoleon appeared at the bar of the Assembly, and attempted a rambling and incoherent justification for what was going on. A motion was made to outlaw him; but the soldiers rushed in; and the refractory members were seized or expelled. A few who were in with the revolution remained, and to the number of fifty voted a decree making Sieyes, Bonaparte and Ducos provisional Consuls, thus conferring on them the supreme executive power of the State. By nightfall the business was accomplished, and the man of Ajaccio slept in the Palace of the Tuileries. He had said to Bourrienne, on that morning, "We shall sleep to-night in the Tuileries—or in prison."

The new order was immediately made organic. There could be no question when Three Consuls were appointed and Bonaparte one of the number, which of the three would be First Consul. He would be that himself; the other two might be the ciphers which should make his unit 100. The new system was defined as the Provisionary Consulate; but this form was only transitional. The managers of the coup went rapidly forward to make it permanent. The Constitution of the Year III. gave place quickly to the Constitution of the Year VIII., which provided for an executive government, under the name of the CONSULATE. Nominally the Consulate was to be an executive committee of three, but really an executive of one—with two associates. The three men chosen were Napoleon Bonaparte, Jean Jacques Cambaceres and Charles Francois Lebrun. On Christmas day, 1799, Napoleon was made FIRST CONSUL; and that signified the beginning of a new order, destined to endure for sixteen and a-half years, and to end at Waterloo.

This era in Bonaparte's life marks the beginning of the union in him of great military and great political power. Henceforth he was destined, to the end of his career, to be the State of France. To his will all things now became rapidly subservient. His ascendency was henceforth the most striking example of merely personal power that the world has witnessed since the days of Julius Caesar. Of a certainty, History, begotten by Reason in the womb of Eternity, is not made—never was made—by any man. But the lines of historical causation were more deflected and determined in their course and connections by the will of Napoleon than by any other one man for the last eighteen centuries.

The rapid ascendency of this extraordinary personage was strongly aided by the recent calamities which had befallen France. Following in the wake of these had come discouragement and the disposition to fall back on him who had shown himself capable of rescue and victory. While Napoleon was in Syria, the Austrians and Russians in coalition had returned to the battle in Italy, and had driven the French out of the country. On the 18th and 20th of June, General Macdonald had been defeated at Cassano and on the Trebbia by Field-Marshal Alexander Suwaroff. On the 15th of August, Joubert lost the battle of Novi and was killed on the very spot where Napoleon had assumed command in 1796. Suwaroff next encountered Massena at Zurich, where, on the 25th and 26th of September, he was worsted by the French. Nevertheless, the Russian forced his way over the Alps, and France was immediately threatened with a counter invasion. At this juncture, however, there was a quarrel in the allied armies, and Suwaroff, disgusted with the Austrians, withdrew from the country, bearing his well-earned title of Italuski.

Napoleon spent the first months of the year 1800 at Paris. The revolution was received with general approbation by the French. The leading features of the new government were a Senate, a Tribunate and a Council of State. These forms were not wholly acceptable to the First Consul; but in the organization of the system, his will and purpose were everywhere predominant. Meanwhile, he appointed General Moreau to the command of the Army of the Rhine, and on the 25th of April that general began his advance into Germany. The first result of the movement was the forcing back of the Austrians on Ulm.

As for Italy, the First Consul reserved for himself the reconquest of that country. With the opening of spring, he projected the Second Italian campaign. On the 14th of May, 1800, he began his famous passage of the Great St. Bernard. We might mark this event as the first of the spectacular aspects of the Napoleonic career. There, in his gray overcoat, under his three-cornered hat, mounted on a rearing steed, goes the conqueror up inaccessible heights against a background of ice-peaks and glittering Alpine sky! The gaze of mankind follows him, and shoutings are heard in half the valleys of the world! The French army surmounted the seemingly impassable Alp in six days, and suddenly debouched into Italy. On the 2nd of June, Bonaparte entered Milan. It was high time that some one should come to the rescue; for two days afterwards Massena surrendered Genoa.

That, however, was the end of the successes of the allies south of the Alps. On the 9th of June ocurred the battle of Montebello, in which the Austrians, under Ott were overwhelmingly defeated by a division of the French army under Lannes. Five days later was fought the great battle of Marengo, which gave its name to the campaign—and ended it. The French were 28,000 strong, and the Austrians numbered about 33,000. Napoleon commanded in person; but under him were Desaix, Lannes and Kellermann. In the beginning of the engagement, General Melas, commander of the Austrians, gained a threatening advantage over the French. For several hours Napoleon was in peril of defeat; but the arrival of reinforcements, under the great Desaix turned the tide; Lannes fought like a lion, and Kellermann with the cavalry completed the overthrow. The Austrians were swept from the field with a loss of more than ten thousand men, while the French loss of fully seven thousand attested the violence and desperation of the conflict. Marengo may be reckoned the first great battle of the Napoleonic wars. It had all the features of those extraordinary conflicts which were subsequently directed by the genius and audacity of Bonaparte. The battle ended the war in Italy. On the next day Genoa and the other fortresses of Upper Italy were resurrendered to the French.

Meanwhile, Moreau had been successful in Germany. He pressed forward to the heart of Bavaria, and on the 15th of July concluded an armistice with the enemy. This agreement was maintained for four months, only to be broken by the Austrians. Hostilities were at once resumed; Moreau advanced, and on the 3d of December, on the field of Hohenlinden, gained a complete victory over the German army. The triumph of the French in this summer was marred by the loss of several of their ablest generals. Beside Joubert at Novi, Desaix, the conqueror of Upper Egypt, who saved the day at Marengo, was killed on that bloody field, and about the same hour the gallant Kleber, walking in his garden at Cairo, was assassinated by the fanatic Solyman.

Victorious in Italy and returning to Paris with unexampled fame, Napoleon might now follow his inclinations for peace. His ascendency over the French began to be recognized abroad, and conditions appeared favorable for a general pacification. The popularity of the First Consul was extreme, and this was intensified by the ill-disguised efforts of his enemies to cast him down. Conspiracies were made against his life. On Christmas eve of the year 1800 the most serious of these attempts was made—and failed. Napoleon was going to the opera. Three conspirators—Carbon, St. Rejant and Limoelan—drove a powder cart, with a fuse, into the Rue St. Nicaise, a narrow street by which the First Consul must pass.

When the cavalcade came by, the fuse was lighted, and a shocking explosion followed. Houses round about were knocked down, and the place was strewn with the dead and dying. The First Consul was unhurt, though his carriage was shattered in the havoc. He went on to the opera, and sat unmoved through the play. The rage of the Parisians on account of this dastardly act against their hero knew no bounds, and the thing attempted was turned to good advantage by the friends of Napoleon.—The eighteenth century came in with Marlborough, and went out with an infernal machine!

The allies now chose to accept a peace. Ambassadors gathered at Luneville, near Nancy, and on the 9th of February, 1801, Napoleon concluded with his enemies his first great definitive treaty. The convention made with Austria at Campo-Formio more than three years previously was confirmed. The secret article of that compact by which France was to have the left bank of the Rhine was openly agreed to. Tuscany was given to Parma. The Cisalpine, Ligurian, Helvetic and Batavian republics which Napoleon had created were recognized. The general effect of the treaty was to undermine that Holy Roman Empire which beginning with the crowning of Charlemagne was destined, after six years, to receive the final dispatch at the hands of Napoleon.

Sensitive Nerves.

When the points of a hairpin are passed along the cheek from a point near the eye to the edge of the upper lip, they seem to separate. The reason is found in the fact that the nerves of the upper lip are more sensitive than those of the cheek, and consequently differentiate the two points. Portions of the back are so little sensitive to the touch that two points three inches apart will create the impression of but one.

PIERRE RAISES SPIDERS.

Sells Them to Wine Merchants. They Make a New Wine Bottle Look Old.

There is but one spider farm in the United States. As far as the writer can learn there are only two in the world. Entomologists have collected and raised spiders for purposes of scientific observation and investigation, just as bacilli and other unpleasant animals are nurtured. Here and there a spider has been made a pet of by some lonely prisoner of Chillon or the Tombs, but spider farming as a money making industry is yet in its infancy. What in the world is done with a crop of spiders? you ask. One has only to go four miles from Philadelphia on the old Lancaster pike and ask for the farm of Pierre Grantaire to see what can be found nowhere else in this country, and abroad only in a little French village in the Department of the Loire.

Pierre Grantaire furnishes spiders at so much per hundred for distribution in the wine vaults of the merchant and the nouveaux riche. His trade is chiefly with the wholesale merchant, who is able to stock a cellar with new, shining, freshly labeled bottles and in three months see them veiled in filmy cobwebs, so that the effect of twenty years of storage is secured at a small cost. The effect upon a customer can be imagined and is hardly to be measured in dollars and cents. It is a trifling matter to cover the bins with dust. That effect is easy to the veriest tyro in the wine trade. But cobwebs—that is a different matter—cobwebs spun from cork to cork, cobwebs that drape the slender neck like delicate lace when the flask is brought to the light, the seal of years of slow mellowing and fruition.

How the Price of Meat is Controlled.

New developments are coming to light daily showing the manner in which the consumer of meat is robbed. There are in the United States controlled by the Beef Trust over 1,200 retail shops. Seven-eighths of these are owned by the members of the trust. Every morning each one receives a telegram or circular from the Beef Trust, informing its manager as to what prices he shall charge that day for the meat he has on hand. Armour & Co., alone, at the Chicago Stock Yards, employ a force of between 25 and 35 men whose sole duty it is to decipher, write and telegraph messages to these firms and to the wholesale dealers throughout the country who are under the denomination of the trust.

A great deal has been said by the wholesale dealers and their masters, the trust, in an effort to make it appear that the middlemen—that is, the retail butchers—are the ones who are responsible for the increase, out of all proportion to the decrease in cattle, in the prices of meat to their customers. As a matter of fact, the trust itself fixes these prices. It determines not only what the retail dealer shall pay to the wholesaler for his meats, but absolutely fixes the price at which the retailer shall sell his steak or chop to the consumer. The method of doing this is in consonance with every other trick of the trust.

If a small dealer determines that a profit of 15 per cent. on his meats is all he needs to make a fair profit out of his business, and therefore sells steaks at 18 cents a pound for which the retail shop owned by the trust on the next corner is charging 20 cents a pound, he will probably do business until the trust discovers that he is not robbing the public enough. Then he is not only undersold by the trust shop on the corner, but is also told when he goes to buy his beef from the wholesaler that the price to him has risen from 5 to 10 and sometimes in extreme cases 25 per cent.

Comments of Various Relatives.

The two girls were walking along Woodward avenue, talking about their best young men, of course. At least one of them was.

"Charlie was up to see me last night," she said, with a twitter.

"That's twice in a week, isn't it?" inquired the other.

"Yes," and she blushed and giggled.

"I suppose he'll come three times in the next week?"

"I suppose so."

"And four times the next?"

"That's what brother says."

"And five times the next?"

"That's what sister says."

"And six times the next?"

"That's what aunty says."

"And seven times the next?"

"That's what papa says."

"And then what?"

"Then we'll get married; that's what everybody says."

"And then what?"

"Then I won't see him any more of an evening; that's what mamma says."—Detroit Free Press.

"Did you ever surrender yourself to the police?" asked Plodding Pete.

"No, sir," replied Meandering Mike. "I'm a firm believer in the principle that the officer should seek the man, not the man the officer."—Washington Star.

HEAD OF THE MEAT TRUST.

Phil. D. Armour's Modest Beginning as a Farmer Boy.

Philip D. Armour's first great operation in provisions was in New York City in the spring of 1865. Born in Northern New York in 1832, he was apprenticed to a farmer. He went to California during the height of the gold excitement, in 1852, and accumulated a modest income. In 1858 he went to Milwaukee and, with John Plankinton, formed the partnership of Plankinton & Armour, in the pork packing business.

In 1865 he and his partner thought the rebellion was about over, Pork was selling at $40 a barrel and the New York operators, who thought the rebellion was nowhere near an end, were buying all that was offered, spot and future, believing that it would go up to $60. Carefully arranging his plans, Armour came to New York and began selling pork short.

His advent caused a sensation, but the sharpers here thought they had a soft thing and bought all the pork that Armour could sell. He was so persistent that he broke the market. In a short time came the news of the fall of Petersburg, then of Richmond and then of the surrender of Lee, and Armour bought in the pork he had sold at $40 at $18 a barrel.

His success in this one deal made him a millionaire. His operations expanded, too, and from the small packer he became the largest pork and beef dealer in the world. He established packing houses in Chicago and Kansas City, and in 1875 went to Chicago to live.

He revolutionized the beef packing and cattle buying business there, and now in his various establishments throughout the country, employs more than 12,000 men. The yearly distributive sales of his Chicago house alone are in excess of the gross annual receipts of any railroad in the world. The value of his business annually is estimated to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $120,000,000.

He has had few setbacks in his business operations, though he has dealt in grain as well as provisions and has engineered several big deals. In 1878 it appeared to many that there would be an enormous supply of pork and that the product was likely to become very cheap. Operators in the Chicago Board of Trade thought it a good time to make money and began selling pork. It happened that Armour was manufacturing more pork than ever and was forced by the speculators to support the market. It took more than $2,000,000 for him to keep the price up, and in the spring of 1879 he had effected a deal with other packers by means of which, though there was still plenty of hogs, the manufactured product became scarce.

How this was done Mr. Armour knows only, but the fact remains that the price of pork began to climb and kept steadily rising until Armour had recovered all his losses and made two or three million dollars besides.

Many of the small fry speculators who were on the side of the bear combination were ruined, and the big operators and other packers conceived a respect for Armour's ability which has since never been lessened, nor permitted them to attempt to do anything with beef or pork which was not in line with his always well known interests.

His wealth is put down at $40,000,000. He is a most affable man in business affairs, and popular socially. He is an indefatigable worker, being engaged in his office daily from 7 A. M. to 6 P. M. He is also a very charitable man, giving away thousands of dollars annually to deserving charities.

He has two sons, Philip D. Armour, Jr., and Jonathan Ogden Armour. They are both partners in their father's business, and are fully as shrewd and capable business men.

The Secret of His Success.

A lady once crossed a street where a little boy was busily sweeping the crossing. She noticed with pleasure the care with which he did his work and smiled as she said to him, "Yours is the cleanest crossing I pass." He lifted his cap with a gallant air and quickly said, "I am doing my best."

All day the words rang in her ears, and for many days afterward; and when a friend, a rich, influential man, inquired for a boy to do errands and general work for him she told him of the little fellow at the crossing. "A boy who would do his best at a street crossing is worth a trial with me," said the man, and he found the boy, engaged him for a month, and at the end of that time was so pleased with him that he sent him to school and fitted him for a high position, which he filled with honor. "Doing my best at the street crossing made a successful man of me," he was wont to say in after years."—Home.

Getting Real Comfort.

"I owe more comfort," said Mr. Johnson, "to my shoemaker than I do to any other man."

"Why, how is that," said Mr. Billings, "when you are always complaining about tight shoes?"

"Well, every evening when I take off my shoes and put on my slippers the comfort I feel is simply intense!"—Youth's Companion.

A CLEAN REFORMER.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, PRESIDENT OF THE NEW YORK POLICE BOARD

Persons who are acquainted with the many sided personality of ex-Civil Service Commissioner Theodore Roosevelt give Mayor Strong credit for sagacity in selecting him to aid in reorganizing the Police Department of New York upon a non-partisan basis.

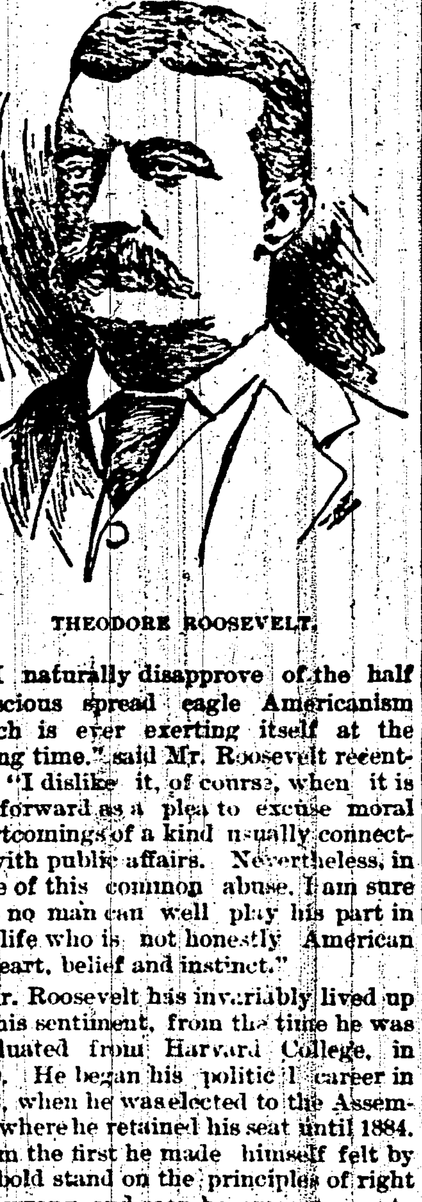
I. the galaxy of younger Republicans in the country there is none better fitted by birth, education, training or other qualifications to undertake the work.

Despite the fact that he is only 37 years old, he has already left the impress upon the politics of this city so strongly that Tammany Hall has never been able to eliminate it, especially his act in forever removing from the Board of Aldermen the power of vetoing appointments made by the Mayor.

As an athlete at Harvard College he won a reputation which was only enhanced by his residence among the rough ranchmen of the West, where he earned the fear and respect of the most desperate by his muscular arms and particularly straight shooting.

In literature his success has been won largely by his remarkable energy. He has labored in spare moments between political duties, and his name is envied by every writer, professional or otherwise, in the country.

His individuality is made up of a dozen decided contrasts, each strong in itself, but all so blended that even his most intimate friends cannot tell where one characteristic begins and the other ends. He has a large fortune, is descended from one of the oldest Knickerbocker families, and is thoroughy at home whether in Fifth avenue drawing rooms, legislative halls or in the cow punchers' huts in Montana and Idaho.



THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"I naturally disapprove of the half conscious spread eagle Americanism which is ever exerting itself at the wrong time," said Mr. Roosevelt recently. "I dislike it, of course, when it is put forward as a plea to excuse moral shortcomings of a kind usually connected with public affairs. Nevertheless, in spite of this common abuse, I am sure that no man can well play his part in our life who is not honestly American in heart, belief and instinct."

Mr. Roosevelt has invariably lived up to this sentiment, from the time he was graduated from Harvard College, in 1880. He began his political career in 1882, when he was elected to the Assembly, where he retained his seat until 1884. From the first he made himself felt by his bold stand on the principles of right and wrong, and soon became a terror to promoters of unclean jobs. On his reelection, when only 25 years old and three years out of college, he became the leader of the Republican minority and was his party's candidate for Speaker. Failing to attain that honor, he secured the chairmanship of the Committee on Cities.

His efforts to impeach Judge Westbrook are well remembered, and Tammany is still groaning over the fact that he took away the Aldermanic veto. From the Legislature Mr. Roosevelt went to the Republican National Convention and earned fresh laurels. When the "third term" men under the leadership of Roscoe Conkling, tried to force the nomination of General Grant upon the party, Mr. Roosevelt contested every point with the imperious Senator, who in the end was defeated in the fight.

Next came one of the most complex political junctures in the history of city elections. This was the three cornered contest between ex-Mayor Hewitt, Henry George and Mr. Roosevelt. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt was badly beaten, but he took defeat philosophically. When Mr. Harrison was elected President, Mr. Roosevelt was appointed a Civil Service Commissioner, which place he has just resigned.

This is but a brief outline of the struggles in which he has taken part. His active opposition to spoilsmen of all classes have kept him in a continual conflict with them. But in all the turmoil he has found time to spend several months of the year clad in a flannel shirt slouch hat and big boots, with his trousers tucked inside, on his ranch out West, and to write dozens of short stories and essays, and to do much serious literary work.

He has written several of the volumes in Mr. Freeman's "Historic Town Series," and two historical volumes on "The Winning of the West." He is still at work upon this last named subject.

When not in Washington he lives near Oyster Bay, L. I., at a beautiful place surrounded on three sides by water, and called "Sagamore Hill." It is there he has his hunting trophies and his library, and where most of his literary work is done.—New York Advertiser.

PETER SCOTT TALKS.

He Has Been Five Years Among the Africans.

Warren Chapel was well filled Monday night by Christian Endeavorers to listen to the address of Peter Scott, a missionary who recently returned from five years of work in Africa. He is a very earnest talker and carried the attention of the audience with him.

In the first part of his talk he spoke of the significance and meaning of the Endeavor pledge, and added that by faithfully observing it the world could be evangelized within the present century. But the great trouble was that too few realized what the pledge meant.

Some thought that the missionary life was somewhat of a romance, but, he said, it is found to be a stern reality when one finds himself among a tribe of savages with whom it is impossible to converse.

He found that the most successful mission work could be accomplished among children. By establishing schools they could be gradually educated for work among their own people.

The Africans among whom he had been engaged were not anxious to hear the Gospel, but when they once realize its teachings they become very fervent believers. One of the greatest difficulties encountered in reaching them was to overcome their superstition and devotion to idols.

The Y. M. C. A. Athletes at Last Determined to Have a Permanent Ball Team.

After much delay dallying the Y. M. C. A. athletics have at last got down to business and are making a determined effort to put a permanent and first-class baseball team in the field. This was accomplished last night at a meeting of the enthusiasts when T. H. Bogert, C. J. Miller and R. Schuyler were made a committee to arrange a schedule of games, and C. Thorn, R. Davis, and S. B. Egan a committee to look after subscriptions to procure uniforms, which will cost $70. The team will be made up the same as that published in The Daily Press Monday, with the exception of John McLaughlin, who is to play with Somerville. The Crescent Oval grounds will be used for playing.

THE CONSTITUTIONALIST.

NO NEED TO WORK NOW.

A Man Looking for Work Proved to be a Thief.

[illegible]AIMED TO BE A CARPENTER.

[illegible]red Board With Mrs. Ralph Con-[illegible] the Strength of a Job He [illegible] Have, and Then Stole the Servant Girl's Jewelry—No Trace of His Identity.

A stranger came to Plainfield last Friday seeking work. He represented himself to be a carpenter and went among several of the builders asking for work. The firm of Utzinger & Kline of North Plainfield were among those whom he asked. They told him that at present they had nothing they could employ him at, but something might turn up in a few days.

He then went to Nelson Brothers grocery store on Somerset street and inquired where he could secure board. David Conover of Manning avenue happened to be present and told him that his mother, Mrs. Ralph Conover of 16 Jackson avenue, occasionally took boarders and she might accommodate him.

The stranger called on Mrs. Conover Friday afternoon and told her he had secured employment with Utzinger & Kline to work on several new houses they are building in Watchung Park, and that he would like to get board near his work. He showed Mrs. [illegible] the firm's business card. [illegible] making arrangements for board he told her he would go down town and telegraph for his trunk, which he said was in Philadelphia, and that he would be back in about a half hour. He returned as he said he would.

After supper he remained in the [illegible] with the Conovers until [illegible]e, when he was shown to [illegible]

He said Saturday was a short day for carpenters and he would not go to work before 8 in the morning. However, he arose about 5 and came down stairs just after Mrs. Conover did, and was in the sitting room, reading.

He had his breakfast about 7, and shortly after, while the family were in the basement, he called to them and said he was going to work, but would be back about 12 for dinner.

Shortly after his departure the girl employed at Conover's went to her room to see if her watch was right with the fire gong, when she discovered that it was missing. She informed the family, and they at once suspected the stranger, but he could not be found. Later in the day the girl missed two very valuable gold pins, which were taken at the same time.

A search was made, but nothing could be found or learned of the stranger's whereabouts.

[illegible] Better Quality of Pipe Now.

[illegible]he rejection of much of the sewer pipe which has been consigned to Honan & Sons has been owing to the manufacturers not having time to make it and have it ready for delivery by May 1, as the contract called for. They were compelled, therefore, to fill the orders with odd pieces, much of which would not stand the inspection of Chief Engineer Gavett. But latterly the consignments have been of much better quality and but little has been rejected. This allows the contractors to proceed with their work much more rapidly.

Plumbers Ordinance Considered.

The Board of Health met Saturday evening and considered amendments to the plumbers ordinance. It will be given a second reading Tuesday evening, May 28.

TEMPTATION TOO MUCH.

John Hibbitts Appropriated Jersey Central Money.

MADE FALSE ENTRIES IN THE BOOKS.

The Discrepancies Were Discovered Saturday Morning by Auditor Hartney, and Hibbitts Immediately Left Town—Amount of Defalcation Not Stated—His Action a Great Surprise.

The strange and sudden disappearance of John Hibbitts, who was employed by Station Agent Joseph A. Haynes as cashier and special agent at the freight house, which occurred Saturday morning just before 11, has caused quite a sensation.

Traveling Auditor Hartney for the Central, who visits each department once a year, came to Plainfield Friday to examine the books in the freight house which have been in charge of Mr. Hibbitts.

Saturday morning he resumed the work, and while doing this he noticed there was a larger amount placed on the cash book than there was cash and receipts to show for.

He asked Mr. Haynes, who was present, to explain it, but he was unable to as he had no knowledge in detail of the accounts, having placed implicit confidence in Mr. Hibbitts's abilities and honesty. Mr. Haynes then called for the latter to explain the difference, and as he did not come immediately, it was thought that he was looking up the necessary papers to compare notes. Considerable time elapsed, and when Auditor Hartney turned around to look for him, he had disappeared.

It was thought that he had stepped out of the office and would return in a moment, but after considerable time had elapsed his absense aroused suspicion that something was radically wrong. After a little investigation it was found that he had left town as soon as the discrepancies were discovered.

No effort was made to capture him and his sureties, the Fidelity Title and Trust Company, were at once notified and they made good the amount of the bond.

The difference in the accounts thus far discovered is the amount of a bill which was paid by Boice, Runyon & Co., but the railroad officials refuse to state the amount.

Mr. Hartney at first thought that the latter's bill had not been paid and called on the firm to make inquiries, but found their accounts straight.

Mr. Haynes told a Daily Press reporter this morning that he had no hesitation in saying that the accounts had been falsified, but he was not prepared to state the amount of the shortage.

Mr. Hibbitts has been employed at the freight house about 4 years, taking a small position at first and gradually working himself up.

When Andrew Kenney left the office Mr. Hibbitts was promoted to cashier and special agent, for which he received good compensation. He has always been steady in his habits, and fully trusted by his employer. He was well known in Plainfield and large amounts of money passed through his hands. His friends are unable to give any cause for his actions, as he never gave any appearance in his business or personal life, that would lead them to account for his strange conduct.

Chief Grant who went to Bound Brook Saturday morning on the 11 train, saw Mr. Hibbitts on the train, but thought he was going to see the wreck and nothing strange was thought of it; in fact nothing was known at the time about the affair outside of the freight office. Since that time he has not been seen and his whereabouts are a mystery.

THE BIG BICYCLE MEET.

Crescent Wheelmen Almost Ready for the Great Event.

RED-LETTER DAY FOR PLAINFIELD.

The New York Times Recognizes the Importance of the National Circuit Meet and Offers a $50 Gold Medal for a Special Mile Scratch Race—More Committees Appointed.

The Crescent Wheelmen turned out in full force at their adjourned business meeting last evening, and no end of enthusiasm was manifested concerning the big cycle race meet Decoration Day. The various committees appointed to look after the details of the great affair made most satisfactory and encouraging reports.

The offer of the New York Times to give a $50 gold medal for a special mile scratch race to be run at the end of the meet, the starters to be only those who had ridden first, second or third in the four Class A events of the day, was unanimously accepted with the thanks of the club. This winner's race, which is a brand-new departure, promises to be the most interesting and exciting of all, as it will be a case of first place or nothing.

The following were appointed a committee of three to look after the checking of wheels: F. J. Pope, Lou Titsworth and Harry Coward. There are accommodations for 400 wheels in the racks at the grounds.

A committee composed of Samuel Wilbur, Vincent W. Nash and Harry Coward were appointed to confer with the Plainfield Bicycle Club with reference to occupying rooms with them, it being necessary to vacate the present quarters in the Board of Trade Building July 1.

The Transportation Committee reported that arrangements would be made to carry the people to and from the grounds.

A music bill for last year which had been overlooked, and amounting to $25, was raised in a few minutes among the members.

Chairman Teal of the Racing Board stated that the Union County Roadsters were not in opposition to the meet as had been reported, and that they intended being present in a body. He also stated that the track was now ready for use, but no person would be allowed on the grounds without a ticket.

The prizes for the various events will be received and placed on exhibition this week. Large triangular cards bearing the talismanic words: "National Circuit Race Meet, Plainfield, May 30," were distributed among the members to be placed in the frames of their wheels, as announcements of the great time coming in case anyone in this part of the world has not already heard all about it, and secured his seat already in the grand stand. Reserved seats are going fast at Mallinson's North Avenue pharmacy; and the sooner one secures his sitting, the better will he see the wheels go 'round and the best men win. Admission tickets are to be had at the bicycle stores and of the club members, and these too may be at a premium before a week has passed, because there is a limit to the capacity of the Crescent Oval bleachers and, it is estimated by the New York papers, that no less than 5,000 wheelmen will blow into Plainfield after the Irvington-Milburn road race on May 30, to take in the track events.

The meeting adjourned to meet Thursday evening, May 28.

At the conclusion of the club meeting the Board of Governors met and elected the following to membership: Harry C. Adams, Frank Day, J. S. Higham, C. E. Pearsall, and A. C. Blair.

The members who had been posted for non-payment of dues were dropped from the rolls.

THE NAVAL RESERVE.

Two complete divisions of the First Battalion, New Jersey Naval Reserves, were sworn into the service of the State at Jersey City last night.

There were several important Government and State officials present to witness the ceremony. The old sloop of war Portsmouth, which was given to New Jersey, and is in the Navy Yard at present being refitted, is to be docked at Jersey City, June 1.

The Plainfield boys mustered in were: Edward Macky, Edward J. Tomlinson, Victor F. Christofferson, W. C. Boyd.

A large number of applications for muster were rejected.

FOR A SEWAGE FARM.

COUNCILMAN FRAZEE OPPOSED IT.

Corporation Counsel Marsh Receives $1,500 Extra Compensation for Work in Connetion With Sewer Matters—Hotel Netherwood Asks For a Liquor License—Other Business.

Outside of the subject of sewers little business was transacted at the adjourned meeting of the Common Council last Monday, and the session was unusually brief. All the members were present except Councilmen Erickson and Stockton.

After the reading of the minutes Councilman Fisk stated that Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh was present and could remain only a few minutes, and moved that the regular business be dispensed with to allow him to hear the report of the Sewer Committee. It was so decided, and Councilman Frost who was in attendance for the first time since his return from Europe, presented the report of the committee of the work already done and that to be finished according to contract. With it was a report from Engineer A. J. Gavett, recommending the purchase of the Smock farm and that offered by the Mutual Life Insurance Company as the best that could be secured for sewage purposes. With the report of the Sewer Committee the committee advised the purchase of this property in the form of a resolution. The reports and resolution were received and filed.

Mr. Frazee asked the Council whether the resolution was intended to give power to buy the property, and when informed it was not, stated that he was not in favor of the proposed system and thought it would only tend to depreciate the value of property in the neighborhood of the beds. The resolution was adopted, Mr. Frazee voting no. Mr. Frost then offered an ordinance relating to the purchase of the above-mentioned property for the sewage beds, which was offered for first reading and ordered advertised in the proper manner. It was so ordered, and Monday evening, June 3, at 8, was the time set for the adoption of the ordinance, and that the Corporation Counsel give proper notice of same. Mr. Frost then submitted plans and specifications for the work on the sewers and beds from Grant avenue to the property where the proposed beds are to be located, and offered a resolution that the same be advertised in the Plainfield papers and in the Engineering News of New York. It was so ordered.

It was decided that Wednesday evening, June 19, at 8, be set to consider the proposals. Mr. Frazee voted no on the resolutions.

Residents of Putnam and Woodland avenues petitioned the Council for the street railway, stating that they had been misrepresented. It was signed by a large majority of the residents of these avenues, who stated that they desired the trolley through the streets named. It was referred to the Street Committee.

A communication was received from William Addis and other residents of Orange street asking that their street be accepted by the city. It was referred to the proper committee.

Residents of Watchung avenue, near Crescent avenue, petitioned Council for a crosswalk. It was referred to the Street Commmittee.

The Crescent Wheelmen asked for the privilege of running stages for the National Circuit meet on their tracks, Memorial Day. After due consideration it was decided that the request could not be granted, as it did not comply with the city ordinance.

The list of officers elected at recent meetings of the fire companies were submitted, and on motion of Mr. Fisk were confirmed.

Mr. Dumont offered a resolution that Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh receive a compensation of $1,500 for his work in connection with the sewer matter, for '94 and '95. The resolution was adopted.

John Spitler, lessee of Hotel Netherwood, asked the Council to grant him a license to sell liquor at the hotel. The application was referred to the License Committee.

Several licenses were granted to truckmen, on the recommendation of the License Committee.

There being no further business Council adjourned.

No Buyers for the Bacon Property.

A large number of people were present at the auction sale of the Bacon property on Sycamore avenue, Saturday afternoon, but no bids were received and the sale was adjourned indefinitely.

A WORK OF SACRIFICE.

MISS TYLER'S INTERESTING TALK.

No Idea of Establishing a College Settlement in Plainfield at Present, But Nevertheless the Remarks Prove Helpful to Those Who Heard Them—Education and Common Sense.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Park Avenue Baptist Church listened to a highly entertaining talk at the residence of one of the members, 821 First place, Tuesday afternoon at 3:30. It was given by Miss Tyler of Philadelphia, on college settlements. There are many people, perhaps, who have never heard of this important work which is being carried on in New York, Boston and Philadelphia, where large settlements are established and doing an incalculatable amount of good. Miss Tyler in her very interesting way told in detail of the work that is being done.

The women that form these settlements are all college bred and refined, and their love for their less fortunate fellow-women has increased so rapidly that it has been the means of a large number entering this field of labor, with the hope of raising them to a higher plane of living. They go among the poorer class of women, and live with them, teaching them how to keep house as it should be, and also how to cook, sew, and in fact do all the work that rightfully falls to the lot of womankind.

Of course there are many discouraging features in the work, but education, coupled with the right proportion of common sense, finally triumphs and the receivers of this knowledge cannot express too much appreciation of the kindness and help received.

It is a work that should engage the attention of all earnest Christian people, for not among the least important branches taught is that of Christianity. The high ideals taught by our Saviour are given a most prominent place in the curriculum, and the women thereby helped to lead lives of influence that will be an incentive to future generations. The homes are made brighter, happier, and more healthful after the earnest labors of these faithful women whose only aim and purpose is to bring unfortunate women up to a high standard of excellence where God intended they should be.

The society were very grateful to Miss Tyler for her helpful talk and though there is no idea at present of establishing a college settlement here, the talk will be of value for the excellent advice and suggestions given.

Plainfield offers good advantages for such a settlement and it seems as though one might be started with good results.

COLLIDED WITH SENATOR ADRAIN.

Two Plainfield Cyclists Have a Narrow Escape From Serious Injury.

Niel Head and Fred Wharton, two employés of the Pond Tool Machine Works, started out Saturday afternoon to enjoy a bicycle ride to New Brunswick. As they were coasting down the hill just before entering the city Senator Adrain was driving across the bridge.

The bicyclists steered out to the right to pass the vehicle, but the Senator evidently did not see them approaching, for as he came near he turned directly in front of them to drive into a side street. The move was so sudden and unexpected to the riders that they were unable to stop or steer clear of the obstruction. Head, who was in the lead, ran into the buggy and was thrown to the ground with great force, and Wharton, who was just behind ran into him.

Head struck on his head and was knocked insensible, remaining in that condition for a half-hour before he could be resusticated. Wharton escaped with nothing more serious than a few bruises. Both wheels were wrecked and the riders were compelled to return home by train.

On their arrival here Head went to Lister's bicycle store and purchased an Elmore wheel. Though a painful lump was formed on his head he was able to go to work this morning.

Coming Back to a Model Town.

Joseph N. Richardson, who was a justice of the peace in Plainfield in 1882, with an office corner of Park and North avenues, and who moved away from Plainfield a few years after, has come back again with his family and taken up his residence at 327 East Sixth street.

THE WORK THAT COUNTS

Warren Chapel Endeavorers Hear Good Reports.

THEY ARE ACTIVE AND ALERT.

Young Christians Celebrate Their Seventh Anniversary with Appropriate Exercises, Which Show that They Practice What They Preach—Dr. Richards Addresses Words of Advice.

Christian Endeavorers are not afraid of threatening weather as was shown by the good attendance at the seventh anniversary exercises of the Christian Endeavor Society of Warren Chapel last Tuesday. The home society turned out in full force, while a number of visitors from other other societies added to the attendance.

After several hymns were sung, John Herman, president of the society, read a Scripture selection which was followed by a prayer by the pastor, Rev. Joseph O. McKelvey. Rev. Mr. McKelvey then spoke a few words of welcome to all in his usual bright manner. Henry Seader, the retiring president, who was acting as leader of the meeting, next announced the report of the secretary, Miss Sadie M. Searing. She told of the flourishing condition of the society with its total of about 100 and an average attendance at each meeting of 43. The sociables and entertainments held during the year were spoken of, while in the line of missionary work she named the pledging of $50 a year for the support of a missionary in a foreign field.

The treasurer's report came next and showed that the society had aided the excursion fund materially and also assisted in the purchase of a new carpet and new books for the library besides the missionary appropriations.

The Missionary Committee's report dealt more fully with them and told of the success of the two cent a week plan.

The report of the Junior Society was given by its President, Miss Hattie Squiers, and showed the unusually large average attendance of 45. The missionary work was discussed, while the carrying of flowers to the hospital showed another important line of service.

The address of the evening by Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards next interested the audience. He took for his topic "Courage". He spoke of the Christian Endeavor pledge, and remarked that it was a pretty big contract.

Many take it not thinking, and only because others do, never realizing the full extent of it, but signing it on an instant without truly making up their minds to be true Endeavorers. He closed with a plea to all to sign it, earnestly in their hearts now, if they had not before.

At the close of the address President Herman presented a book from the society to the retiring president, Henry Seader, for his faithful services in the past, and another to Miss Maggie Shepherd for her faithful service.

Mr. Seader then announced that this part of the programme had been concluded, but that a more substantial entertainment would commence.

After a general handshaking everybody settled down to enjoy the cake and lemonade that was passed around, and a social chat with their friends.

The efficient committee in charge of the refreshments consisted of Miss Anna Searing, chairman; Miss Louise Keller, Miss Minnie Zeisz, Miss Minnie Bolsterli, Miss Lilly Myers, Miss Hattie Squier, Miss Kate Dyke, Miss Maggie Shepherd, A. R. Johnson, and Frank Splain.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Great Genius Displayed In Reforming France.

AT THE SUMMIT OF GREATNESS.

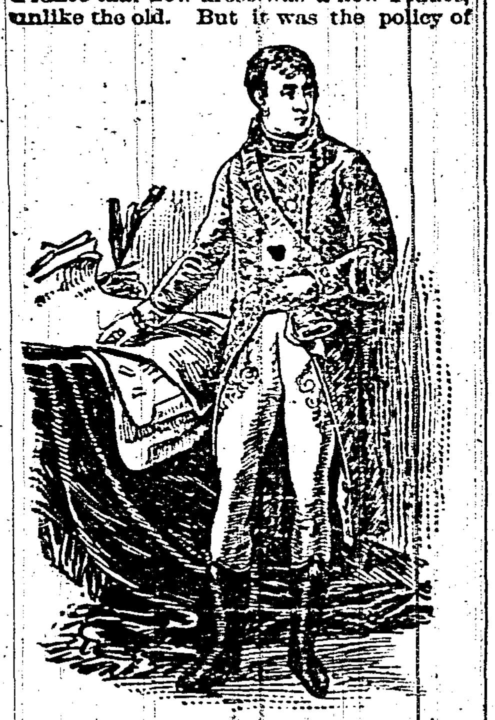
[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XIV.—THE CONSULATE.

No question with which the First Consul had now to deal was more important than that of religion. France in process of restoration must have a faith. In the whirlwind of revolution, the old religious institutions of the people had been abolished. "As to me, M. le President," said Naigeon in the Convention one day, "I am free to avow myself an atheist." Procureur Chaumette had had his placard put over the gates of all graveyards thus, "Here is an eternal sleep." Atheism had been formally proclaimed. In the general anarchy, the Mother Church had been destroyed. Among the masses, however, religious beliefs and hopes were not extinguished; even Robespierre had had his ridiculous Feast of the Etre Supreme! Napoleon well calculated that reviving France must have a new religion; and what should the new be but the old?

No sooner was the new government established than the First Consul put out his hand with overtures to Rome. He proposed to Pius VII. a settlement of the religious status of the French. The celebrated Concordat, of the 15th of July, 1801, by which the Roman Catholic religion was restored in France was the result. The secular pacification by the treaty of Luneville was followed hard after by the conciliation of Rome. The essence of the agreement was that the new bishops—to be nominated by the First Consul and confirmed by the Pope—should swear allegiance to the Republic.

Nothing could surpass the activity of Napoleon in the first year of the Consulate. The energy displayed by the government was astounding. Everything was in process of reorganization. True, the ancient regime was extinct. True, the France that now arose was a new France, unlike the old. But it was the policy of the Consulate to revive as much as was valuable out of the former estate. The people were reanimated and inspired. A new life flourished on every hand. The vigor of the First Consul diffused itself through all the elements of society.



NAPOLEON AS FIRST CONSUL, BY GROS.

The educational system, also, felt the touch of the master hand. The schools were visited and reformed. New methods of instruction and discipline were suggested. Prizes were offered, and ambitious students were pensioned. The exiled members of the old Constituent Assembly and the Emigrants alike were invited to return. Peace was the order of the day. The civil condition was considered in all its parts. New institutions were created. A Consular Guard was established. Vaccination was introduced by the example and precept of Bonaparte. Streets, buildings, bridges, wharves, highways, parks, hospitals, cemeteries, sewers—everything began to be planned, considered and performed with a rational activity which still surprises our century.

The First Consul was most anxious to effect a settlement with Great Britain. That done, peace might be universal. The summer of 1801 was consumed with overtures freely made by Napoleon and sullenly considered by Pitt. On the 1st of October the preliminaries of a peace were signed at London. Everything seemed to be about to subside into calm. Such, however, was the political condition of Europe that the hoped-for pacification lagged and it was not until the 27th of March, 1802, that the TREATY OF AMIENS was finally concluded.

The parties to this famous compact, so spectacular and so specious, were Great Britain on the one side, and France, Spain and the Batavian Republic on the other. Of the last-named power Napoleon had been made vice-president two months previously—a fact indicative of his growing power south of the Alps. By the terms of the treaty, England agreed to restore all the conquests recently made by her, except Ceylon and Trinidad. These she was to retain. Malta she was to restore to the Knights of St. John. The French for their part were to relinquish Egypt, and to evacuate Naples and Rome. The Ionian Republic was to be acknowledged, and a general peace declared. For the moment it appeared that all Europe was about to emerge from the shadows of horrid war into sunshine and a new era of progress and happiness. Never was a historical situation more hopeful and hollow, more flattering and fallacious.

In the brief period of peace many things were done to arouse the enthusiasm of the French. The administration would have the nation forget the violence and sorrows of the past. That new French society, which had begun to display itself when the Societe des Victimes was organized, now burst the chrysalis and came forth in splendor. The First Consul was the center of the radiance. He had removed his residence from the Palace of the Luxembourg to the magnificent Tuileries. Paris was no longer lacking in brilliancy.

Napoleon showed the greatest genius in reforming the civil and military institutions. On the 19th of May, 1802, the Legion of Honor was authorized, and on the succeeding anniversary of the demolition of the Bastile, that famous order of soldiers was instituted. Such was the precision, the virtue, the energy, the skill and force of the administration that none might doubt or oppose it. The popularity of the First Consul became as immeasurable as the confidence in him was boundless. The industries of France flourished like a new spring spreading over May, and the funds of the Republic suddenly rose a hundred per cent!

The ambitions of any other than Bonaparte might here have made a pause. The lust for more might here have been appeased. He was really at the summit of human usefulness—and therefore at the summit of greatness. His birthday in the coming August would bring him to the end of his thirty-third year. He was young and handsome in person. He was warmed with enthusiasm. The bravest men and the most beautiful women were gathered around him—the one to flatter, and the other to adore. If the Jacobin was still fluid in his blood, it no longer expressed itself in democratic mutterings and proclamations. The long black hair of the whilom revolutionist was closely cropped. The haggard Italian face of the pauper student had given place to rosy cheek and smiling lip. Except in the incongruous black cravat of the otherwise well-dressed First Consul, the sansculotte was no longer discoverable at his evening receptions!

But the project was already on for an extension and augmentation of power. Glory must be added to honor. The "mountain devil" was busy in the breast of Bonaparte. In the alluring summer of 1802 the dream had already possessed him of a life tenure of the Consulate. The victorious general and popular chief executive would be consul ad finem. The Senate concurred in the proposal; and a consultum was prepared. There was a dispute whether it should be for ten years or for life; and in this form the question was to be submitted to the people. A plebiscite was sent forth, and the French nation was asked to pass judgment on its favorite. "Napoleon, sera-t-il Consul a Vie?" Such was the inscription prepared and put up over all the voting places in France. "Napoleon, shall he be Consul for Life?"

An extraordinary spectacle was witnessed. On the 4th of August, 1802, the election was held. The voters in France numbered 3,577,259; and of these 3,368,185 voted in the affirmative, leaving only 209,074 in the negative! It was perhaps the most overwhelming popular decree ever registered by a people. True, the soldiers voted—voted for their idol. True, the clientele of the Consulate voted—voted for the master. True, the Revolution voted—voted for its offspring. True, the New Order voted—voted for its hope. But nevertheless, the people voted—voted for their Man! Napoleon might well mutter, "Whose are the votes opposed to me? Those of idealogists, Jacobins and peculators under the Directory!" What he said was true!

But not all, in the meantime, had been well with the Republic—and with him. Fortune in some things had gone against the French. The coveted occupation of Egypt had tottered and fallen. General Menou, who succeeded to the command of the army in that country after the assassination of Kleber, had behaved with singular fatuity. Failing to perceive that eccentricity is not genius, he had turned Mohammedan, and taken the name of Abdallah Bey. He sank into inaction at Alexandria; and when, in March of 1801, Admiral Keith and Sir Ralph Abercromby landed at Aboukir and came against him, he was defeated in battle, and the prospects of the French in Egypt were ruined.

Napoleon heard of the Egyptian disaster with anger and mortification. His chagrin was little relieved by the death of Abercromby, who was fatally wounded in the battle of Alexandria, or by the foolish assurances of Menou that all was going well. It became necessary for the French colony to evacuate Egypt, and this was done on the 30th of August, 1801. The First Consul made no strenuous effort to retain his conquest in Africa; for the preliminaries of peace with England were now about to be signed; the dream of French supremacy in the land of the Pharaohs was forever dissipated.

The year 1802 has been cited as the most glorious in French history. It was certainly the most fertile in promise. Why should not the treaty of Amiens become the happy date of a new era for mankind? France was regenerated. England had gold and maritime glory. Italy had emancipation. Germany had experience—if nothing better. Russia had her pacific Alexander I., her Suwaroff, and her new provinces of Georgia. America had a democrat for President, and a possible Louisiana. But all this was as hollow as an echo of the nightwind. Strange that the vast volume of historical forces should be turned in this direction and in that by the interposition of straws and pebbles!

The fatal thing in the treaty of Amiens was that it promised—promised, and did not perform. There were things to be done; and these were not done. Preternatural suspicion seized on the cabinets of all Europe. Note the circumstances: England in the preceding war had emancipated the negroes of Hayti. Toussaint l'Ouverture, leader of the natives, had been made commander-in-chief by the French, in 1797. Independence was reached under the patronage of France; but when Bonaparte became First Consul, an act was passed in the French Council for the restoration of slavery in the island; and an army under General Leclerc, brother-in-law of Bonaparte, was sent to Samana to enforce the decree. Toussaint was put down, treacherously seized and taken to France, where he presently died in prison. The civil conflict continued in Hayti; the yellow fever broke out, and an English fleet appeared off the coast. Notwithstanding the peace of Amiens, here was war.

In the meantime, Sebastiani, Napoleon's agent in the East, came back to Paris, and published in The Moniteur a report in which there was a hint of the purpose of France to reoccupy Egypt! Moreover, the First Consul proceeded to divide Piedmont into Departments, after the French manner—as though the country were altogether French. To the complaints of Lord Whitworth, the English ambassador, he simply answered, "These things are only bagatelles." England hereupon—the treaty of Amiens to the contrary notwithstanding—refused to give back Malta to the Knights of St. John. This was flagrant. She had agreed to do so; and Napoleon insisted that she must. Moreover, the Cape of Good Hope, the "caravansary of the Indies," was not surrendered. It became apparent that Great Britain would not keep her compact; and this signified the imminent renewal of war. Bonaparte himself foresaw the coming storm. In his eagerness to prepare for it—seeing the exposures of the French empire in North America—he made haste to sell to the United States for 60,000,000 francs the vast domain stretching from the Mississippi to the Pacific.—Pitt got Malta, Napoleon an excuse, and Jefferson Louisiana!

KILLED IN A WRECK.

Engineer Harry Buck Forfeits Life for Duty.

HE STUCK BRAVELY TO HIS POST.

The Smashup Was the Result of Collision of Parted Sections of a Reading Coal Train, Into Which a Fast Flying Freight Train Crashed—All Traffic Blocked for Hours.

A bad wreck occurred on the Jersey Central between Greenbrook and Bound Brook on Saturday at 1. A train of empty coal cars going west, drawn by a Philadelphia and Reading engine, broke in two just west of Greenbrook. The engineer ran some little distance before discovering the accident and then stopped, with the result of the detached cars crashing into the other section of the train. The collision threw seven coal cars off the rails and scattered them in a tangled mass over the other three tracks.

Before signals could be got out a Philadelphia freight, also drawn by a P. & R. engine coming east, ran full headway in the wreck. The locomotive was ditched, and Engineer Harry Buck of Philadelphia killed. Outside of a slight bruise to Passenger Conductor Brown, who was riding on the engine from Bound Brook to New York, no other railroad employes were injured.

All tracks at the point of the wreck were blockaded. The wrecking crews from Elizabethport and Jersey City were sent to the scene of the accident.

The Baltimore and Ohio train, due here at 1:17 a. m., after arriving at the North Avenue station, backed down to Roselle again, and went through to Bound Brook over the Lehigh Valley tracks. The other through trains are using the same route until the wreck is cleared away.

Local trains made up at Somerville transferred passengers at the wreck to trains that were made up at Dunellen and that were run down to that point. As a rule they passed the North avenue station on time, and no complaint was heard from the commuters on account of any delay.

Both outside tracks were clear at 10. Buck is said to be the engineer who escaped unscathed from a locomotive explosion at Dunellen ten years ago.

AN INVENTIVE FIREMAN.

Driver Townley Perfects an Arrangement to Record the Time of Alarms.

Driver William Townley of Alert Hose wagon is a genius. Some time ago he conceived the idea of inventing a contrivance whereby he would be able to stop a clock automatically at the exact moment a fire alarm is received at the West Second street house. He has about accomplished his plan, though it is not yet in perfect working order.

An ordinary pendulum clock is placed under the ticker on which the alarm is recorded on a strip of paper by punching little holes. A weight is used to run the ticker which drops a certain distance at every stroke of the gong, and directly under the weight is a brake which holds a lever in position. When the lever is released from the brake, which is thrown off by the ticker weight dropping onto it, another small rod is drawn up close against the pendulum, which ceases swinging, and thus stopping the hands at the minute the alarm was received.

The time tests of the alarm have no effect on the arrangement, because the brake is set so far away from the ticker that it takes three blows to permit the weight to fall sufficient for the two to come in contact.

MILLIGAN COMING BACK.

Counselor Runyon Says the Contractor Will Return and Settle Matters.

In conversation with Lawyer H. C. Runyon this morning a Press reporter learned that the trouble over alleged forgery between Joseph Milligan and the several contractors had about been settled, and the one remaining debtor, Ivins & Co., would be paid today. Mr. Milligan went to Newark the day the forgery was alleged to have taken place to collect some money to square himself, when it was rumored that he had left town for good.

The fact was that he was building a house for Mr. Kelly at Oak Tree and was getting his material from a Metuchen firm. They refused to let him have any more till he had paid his bills, hence his effort to collect the money before the bank closed that day, so he could finish the Kelly contract. Mr. Milligan did not realize that there was any seriousness attached to his actions and Ivins & Co., who had the warrant issued now say they are sorry they did so.

Mr. Milligan will return to Plainfield in a few days when matters will be settled satisfactorily.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Martin of Newark are visiting at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Lobert Clark, Washington Valley. Mr. Martin and Mrs. Clark are brother and sister.

A DAPPER YOUNG MAN.

Couldn't Curb His Tongue, and Was Incarcerated in the Rookery.

Robert Ferris, a dapper young man with an oily tongue, who has been sojourning in the city the past three months canvassing orders for crayon portraits, was incarcerated in a dingy cell in the police station this morning by Sergeant Kiely, where he was left to ponder on the folly of being too fresh.

Young Ferris, who spends two hours a day combing his blonde hair and the rest of his time—when not asleep and then he dreams—in telling of his love conquests, picked a quarrel with a West Front street clerk yesterday morning, during which he called the young man several vile and ungentlemanly names.

The young man entered a complaint against Ferris, and Sergeant Kiely told the erstwhile picture vender to appear in city court this morning at 8:30. But the blonde and suave young man did not comply with the order. Shortly after 10 the sergeant met him on the corner of Front street and Park avenue, and, amid many protestations, escorted him to the rookery.

NOT WORKING TOGETHER.

Loyal Ladies League Are Alone in Their Memorial Day Programme.

Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G.A.R., Major Anderson Post, No. 109, G.A.R., Woman's Relief Corps, No. 10, Auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, and John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, will have full charge of the Memorial Day exercises in Music Hall and the various cemeteries. The services at Scotch Plains in the morning will be conducted by the Sons of Veterans, and Rev. Mr. Braker of the Scotch Plains Baptist Church will make a short address.

The above organizations are not associated in any way with the Loyal Ladies League, as that is an entirely distinct society. This statement is made for the reason that the above organizations have been misrepresented in several ways, which is an injustice to them in their work for Memorial Day.

Netherwood Does Want It.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—

The residents of the Netherwood district propose at the next meeting of the Council to show the Railroad Committee that their desire is fully as great as ever to have the trolley extended to Netherwood station. At a recent meeting of the Council an individual took upon himself to act for spokesman for Netherwood and he falsely stated that the sentiment of the residents was opposed to the road, whereas he had the opinion of but four people (himself included), one of whom is a public hackman.

Netherwood will present such evidence next week that will convince the Council we do want the road and insist on its extension. Trolleyite.

Must Look Out for Home First.

The Woman's Relief Corp, No. 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., met last evening and discussed Memorial Day plans. They decided that it would be impossible for the Corps to go to Scotch Plains that day as there is so much to be attended to here. The women ask for the co-operation of all in their efforts to make the day one long to be remembered.

Epworth Tennis and Croquet Players.

The Epworth League of Grace M. E. Church are planning to enjoy the Summer months in a pleasant manner. They are about to organize a lawn tennis and croquet association, and grounds will be laid out and graded near the church, where these games can be played. This makes additional pleasures that will add materially to the social side of this growing church.

Miss Newberger's Talent.

Ought to Have Been Home.

Jacob Krismaker, a young lad whose home is in Newark, had one of his feet caught between the bumpers of Jersey Central cars at Greenbrook yesterday afternoon, and badly smashed. He was stealing a ride. The boy was brought to this city and taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital.

Miss Emma Haviland of Rockview avenue has gone to Northampton, Mass., to visit friends at Smith College.

The May issue of the Review of Reviews contains an excellent picture of Commander M. T. Endicott, U. S. N., a brother of Dr. G. W. Endicott of this city, one of the committee of three recently appointed by President Cleveland to investigate the feasibility of the Nicaragua Canal project. The committee left Mobile in the steamer Montgomery for Greytown, Nicaragua, last Tuesday.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narc without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

A SPRING SONG.

John Ward Stimson, of The Chestnuts, contributes the following written from Saranac Lake, to The Independent:

  A sweet voice on the valley hurled
A strange, strong fragrance stealing t
  With murmurings of the under-wor

The gurgling rush in hidden nooks!
  The mystic something in the air!
The melting snow, the sap, the brook!
  The peeping verdure everywhere!

Oh blessed life, again renewed!
  Oh tender voice without, within!
Oh sunny land, through tears bedewe
  Dear Nature, purified of sin.

Ah me! Methinks, as shadows fade,
  That I am "Hope" that spreads her wing.
Awake, sad heart! Be undismayed.
  It is the Spring! The Spring! The Spring!

PLAINFIELD YOUNG MEN.

What Is Being Done by the Christian Association.

GREATER WORK IN THE NEW HOME.

Interesting and Edifying Reports Submitted at the Annual Meeting—Esteem Expressed for Worthy and Efficient Workers, and Gratitude Given to Helpful Papers.

The annual business meeting of the [illegible] M. C. A. was held Friday in the Assembly Hall of the Association [illegible] The meeting was well at- [illegible] much interest was manifested in the work that had been accomplished and the plans that were promulgated for the ensuing year. Previous to the business session, however, the social committee of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Association served a New England supper to the active members, which was attended by a large element of the younger members. Baked beans, brown bread, doughnuts and coffee was the menu, and palatable it was, too. The following as the committee who served the refreshments: Mrs. H. M. Maxson, Mrs. J. W. Gavett, Mrs. Roger Murray, Mrs. Frank Clawson, Mrs. S. R. Struthers, Miss J. L. Demarest, Mrs. L. M. French and Mrs. J. H. Manning.

At 8:15 the meeting was called to order by President William D. Murray, and J. A. Robinson was selected for temporary secretary. After the minutes of the last annual meeting had been read and approved a committee was appointed to make up a list of nominations.

While the nominating committee were in conference the committees' [illegible] officers' reports were made. The first to be presented was from the committee on educational work, which was read by chairman J. Cahoone. The work of the past year was shown to have been practical and profitable, mechanical drawing, stenography, bookkeeping, arithmetic and German [illegible] the subjects taught. The largest [illegible] that of bookkeeping. Out [illegible] of sixteen in the stenographic instruction five had qualified in the seven months term to hold positions. Next fall it is calculated to organize a class in Spanish. A first-class library is needed. Though there is shelf room for 2,300 only 1,200 volumes are on hand, and most of these are in bad condition. Overtures have been made to the Public Library towards establishing a distributing station at the association building, but the plans have not yet been consummated. What is needed to make the educational more efficient is salaried teachers. Physical Director MacPhie reported that since January 18 he had examined 172 men and 72 boys. There is a growing appreciation, he said, of the benefits of the gymnasium, which enables the brain worker to accomplish his tasks with more rapidity and ease.

In the young men's class there had been an average attendance of 36, in the boys class, 50, and in the business men's class, 8.

A. C. LaBoyteaux, chairman of the committee on religious work, reported that since occupying the new building the Sunday afternoon meetings had increased in attendance from 40 and [illegible] to 150 and 250.

The report of Treasurer H. O. New- [illegible] showed that the total receipts for [illegible] year had been $4,293.31, of which [illegible] most important item was $2,8[illegible]4.08 [illegible] membership fees. The expenditures were $1,270.73, of which $2,168.32 was for officers salaries. A balance of [illegible]22.58 is left on hand. The report was [illegible]ferred to H. R. Munger to audit. President Wm. D. Murray's report [illegible] as follows:

"Once more the pleasant duty comes to me, as your President, of reporting to you our work for the year. It is not hard to render a report for the Plainfield Young Men's Christian Association because there is always something to report. The great trouble is to select from the whole the most important things.

"From month to month reports are rendered to our board of directors showing the progress of the various departments of our work. In such reports the details can be given, which it would be tiresome to repeat here tonight. I can only refer to those matters which will give you, the members of the Association, a general idea of the year's work.

"There are three departments of our work which this report does not touch: the religious, the educational and the physical, not because they are not important, but because they are so important that the Chairmen of the Committees having charge of these departments, have been asked to render separate reports. All our work is religious in the sense that the reason for our existence is that we may lead young men to Jesus Christ, their Saviour.

"The most important event during the year, the event which has put a song of rejoicing in our mouths and has filled our hearts with joy, is the consummation of our long deferred hope, the completion and occupation of our beautiful building. The first subscription to this enterprise was made in May 1887, and we moved in in January 1895, nearly seven years after. Great credit is due our architect, A. L. C. Marsh, for the splendid results he has obtained with the amount of money at his disposal, and we must ever be grateful to the various contractors, every one of whom more than fulfilled his contract. Our financial statement is as follows:

Cost of Land	$14,000.00
Building Complete	46,224.00
Furnishing	4,693.00
Total	$64,917.00
We have paid	$50,700
Leaving a deficit of	14,217

"Of this amount $5,000 at least ought to be realized when Watchung avenue is extended, and we have a legacy of $2,000 from William R. Clarkson, which will be paid in due time. This leaves us about $7,000 to be raised. We are praying that it may not be necessary to place a mortgage on the building, but that our friends who have so liberally contributed to our work, will continue to help us until, this, one of the finest Association buildings in New Jersey is wholly ours. Or may not some public spirited friend arise who will out of his abundance free us from the bondage of debt?

"On June 28, 1894, in response to an invitation sent to the ladies of the different churches, a goodly number met to discuss the subject of furnishing the building. Thereafter a committee was formed, and it was finally decided to undertake the work and to attempt to raise the necessary money by a fair.

"Preparations continued until Nov. 27, when for five days, a Festival of Nations was given in the building. The interest of the people of the city, both in the preparation for this entertainment and in its support, was exceedingly gratifying. As is well known over $4,600 was raised, a sum sufficient to thoroughly furnish our new home. We never can thank the ladies enough. We feel, too, that we ought again to acknowledge the many kindnesses shown to us by the merchants of the city, who were determined to give us whatever we needed at the very lowest prices. This made it possible for us to furnish this large building with the above sum of money.

"Our expenses for this year will, of course, be larger than ever, though it is hardly possible to tell exactly what they will be. Much of it can be merely estimated. Our finance committee, however, after careful consideration, reported a budget of $6,300. The principal items of this are: Salaries for secretary, assistant secretary, physical instructor, and janitor, $3,420; light and heat, $1,200; insurance, water and interest, $1,000; reading matter, educational work, printing, postage, etc., $780.

"Our income is from membership and rentals. This we estimate at $4,300, which may be too high. This leaves us an estimated deficit of about $3,500 to be raised by subscription, and of this about $1,400 is now subscribed. We should be glad to receive any sum towards this amount. We estimate that what we give to members who pay $8, costs us fully $15. It is no more than they ought to have, and the great majority of them cannot pay more than they do. This is why we have to ask the friends of young men to contribute the difference, so that those who want a place and safe resort can have it. Not long ago, a man, not a Christian, living in a New York town, said to his son, 'John, I don't want to see you standing around the corners nights'. John answered, 'Do you want me to go inside, father?' And when the father realized what the only places he could go into were, he sent for the Young Men's Christian Association State Secretary and started an Association. It is interesting to know that the people of our city contributed during the past year $562 to the work of the International Committee, and over $353 to the work of our State Committee.

"The year has been noted as a convention year for our Association. The State Convention is so recent that it only needs to be mentioned to bring up pleasant recollections of the few days we spent in conference with our fellow-workers from all over the State. The Convention helped us and helped other Associations by demonstrating, among other things, the possibility of securing buildings adequate for their needs. The cost of the Convention was $194.94, and this was paid largely from collections taken at the evening meetings.

"We were represented for the ninth time at the great gathering of college students at Northfield. This conference meets this year from June 29 to July 7 and we hope that Plainfield will be again represented.

"Our members rendered good services at the District Convention held at Somerville, and from the seed planted then an Association has grown. Westfield, likewise, partly through our efforts, has organized an Association.

"The President, General Secretary and Assistant Secretary attended the International Convention at Springfield, Mass., where over a thousand delegates assembled, representing every State in the Union, besides Canada, British Columbia and Mexico. The broadness of our work was well shown at the closing meeting of this Convention when men of eleven nations spoke, each one closing his address with the words, spoken in his native tongue, 'Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever'.

"The Plainfield Association has been fortunate in having employes who have honored us. One of our former secretaries, after having been for some years State Secretary of Virginia, is about to become one of the Railroad Secretaries of the International Committee. Another is now State Secretary of Alabama and Mississippi. Mr. Clemens who helped us so much in our educational work is now Assistant State Secretary of New Jersey, and is to be one of the instructors at an educational conference to be held in Springfield next month. And our present corps gives promise of as great service, though we trust they will long be spared to us. Mr. Jessup takes hold of the work very well; Mr. MacPhie has proved himself a splendid man in the gymnasium; and our devoted General Secretary, Mr. Manning, is so efficient that we almost fear to sound his praises where other associations may hear them. A secretary's position is not a bed of roses; his hours are long, from 9 a. m to 11 p. m His work is trying, drawing alike on sympathy, patience and physical endurance. If any member of this Association can at any time be of assistance to these men, who are making sacrifices to help us in the work the Lord has committed to us, let them see to it that they do it.

"There have been a number of occasions during the year which we have considered worthy of special note. In June last we, in company with Associations all over the world, joined in celebrating the jubilee, for on June 6, 1894, the Young Men's Christian Association was fifty years old.

"A delightful outdoor conference of committee-men was held at Mr. Kissam's hospitable home at about the same time of year, on one of the subjects discussed at the State Convention 'Esprit de Corps in Association Work.' The social gatherings of committee-men serve to foster a spirit essential to the best work.

"In December, D. A. McPhie came to us as Physical Director, and Dr. and Mrs. Endicott gave a reception at which the medical men of the city were invited to meet Mr. McPhie who thus came in immediate contact with those who can help him most in his work.

"On February 12, our new building was formally opened by appropriate exercises in the hall. Mayor Gilbert presided, and addresses were made by Dr. Richards, State Secretary Lucas and the President. This was followed by a reception at which many friends inspected our new home.

"For years it has been evident to us that our work in the future depends largely upon what we do for those who are now boys. But prior to this year we have not been able to do much because we have had no place. Men and boys will not mix. Now, however, the boys have their own rooms and are allowed the use of the gymnasium and swimming tank on certain days. This has brought us a membership of seventy-five fine boys of whom we are proud.

"There are many others matters that ought to be mentioned, but time forbids. We believe the Association is on a firmer basis than ever before. Our membership is 450, exclusive of the boys. During January the average daily attendance at the building was 134.

"There is one phase of our work, however, which has been neglected, and that is Bible study. Every Young Men's Christian Association ought to be a training school for Christian workers. We have facilities and opportunities along this line which the churches do not have, and they have supported us because we have supplied this lack. Let us plan for better things in this direction during the coming year.

"In closing may I not commend to you this work for the young manhood of our city? Give of your substance to support it, deny yourselves some social pleasures that a portion of your time may be used here, and in your daily communion with that all powerful God who ordained this work, pray that such wisdom may be given to us that during the coming year many young men shall be led to that Saviour whom we love and serve."

At the conclusion of the President's report, the nominating committed presented the following selections, and they were unanimously elected:

President, W. D. Murray; recording secretary, E. L. Bonney; corresponding secretary, John Valiant; treasurer, H. O. Newman; directors, E. R. Ackerman, J. H. Batchelor, C. E. Boss, L. H. Bigelow, Jr., S. Cahoone, G. R. Cornwell, J. W. Gavett, A. C. LaBoyteaux, H. M. Maxson, Nelson Runyon, George S. Clay, R. H. Radford.

The following members were elected to membership: Sinclair Stuart, Jr., active; Philip DeHart, associate; Fred Hockridge, associate; E. Walters, associate; R. D. Schoonmaker, active; J. H. Leggett, active; A. F. Randolph, active; D. M. Gardner, active; G. H. Burger, active sustaining.

On motion of H. O. Newman the women who served the New England supper were thanked; and a resolution was adopted that the local press be thanked for the space they had devoted, and interest which they had evinced, towards the affairs of the Association.

D. E. Titsworth spoke very earnestly in favor of extending a vote of thank to the press, because he said that it was to them that much of the present success of the Association was due.

LOWRIE-GRIFFITH.

The following despatch was received by The Daily Press Thursday afternoon; and in the absence of definite knowledge from the family, publication was withheld. Today it appeared in The Morning Journal of New York:

Cincinnati, Ohio, May 16.—Harry H. Lowrie, of Plainfield, N. J., is in this city on his wedding tour, in which he is starring without the support of his bride.

Last Monday evening Harry was wedded to Inez Mae Griffith of Washington, D. C., who, until recently, was employed in the Treasury Department. She left her position to give her attentions to the arrangement of her wedding trousseau, and on its completion was married to Lowrie, who, for two years, had been a student of the Georgetown Medical College

Dr. Lowrie, the lad's father, is one of the most prominent physicians of Plainfield, and some time ago cut off his son's allowance on hearing of his alleged gayety. Harry then applied to an uncle, who lives near Washington, who responded liberally until a few weeks ago, when the two had a row.

Dr. McGruden, dean of the college, at whose residence young Lowrie boarded, turned on the boy, and on the morning after his marriage Harry fled, reaching this city yesterday afternoon, penniless and despondent.

Friends of the young student in this city endeavored to get him to go back home and face the music. It is understood that Lowrie's parents and other relatives are greatly put out over the marriage.

Miss Griffith has always moved in good society and is of a highly respected family.

The matter thus becoming public, denial of its errors is proper. The fact is that Harry has had no trouble with his parents. He did not come home when he was expected, and as no word came from him his father went on to Washington to look him up. Harry married without his parents' knowledge, and made the mistake of applying elsewhere for help in the hope of evading their displeasure. His parents have sent to Chicago for him to return home, and will welcome him back; and that is all there is to what has been wrongly elaborated by gossip into a social sensation.

TEA BY MRS. FRENCH.

Plainfield People Enjoy the Hospitality of a West Seventh Street Home.

The engaging manners, the stylish gowns, and the radiant countenances of the fair guests, combined with the tastefully arranged pink and green decorations of the rooms, made the reception and tea given by Mrs. John Henry French at her home on West Seventh street yesterday an event of sociability and happiness.

The dining room was a beautiful scene. From the centre chanderlier pink streamers were gracefully hung to the four corners of the dining table. Two of the streamers were entwined with green ferns and thus the predominant colors were harmonized in effect. On the table vases of ferns, daffodils, roses and other fair and sweet scented flowers, added to the attractiveness of the surroundings. The parlors also were adorned with flowers.

Mrs. French was assisted in receiving by Mrs. F. E. Keep of Boston, Miss Boughton of Philadelphia, Miss Eddy of Brooklyn, Miss Ida Yerkes, Miss Harriet French, Miss Lillian Fritts, Mrs. George Hallock, and Mrs. Dewitt Brokaw of Plainfield.

Those who poured tea were: Mrs. Howard Runyon and Mrs. Philip McIntyre, assisted by Miss Grace Yerkes, Miss Arline Crane, Miss Mary Fritts, Miss Jennie Haviland, Miss Maude French of Plainfield; Miss Negus of Bound Brook, and Miss Bertha Thompson of Somerville. About fifty were in attendance.

Eager for U. S. Service.

Four applications have been made to Chief Clerk George Godown by those who desire to take the civil service examination for clerk or carrier service in the local postoffice. The examination will be held June 1. The time limit for application to try the examination expired last Monday.

THEY WANT MUCH.

A BACHELOR'S COMPLAINT ABOUT AMERICAN WOMEN.

He Finds Something Essentially Faulty in the Social Relationship of American Husbands and Wives, the Horrid Thing.

Now, I want to say just this: Being a bachelor and the kind of a bachelor I am, I see more wives than do most married men. If this were not so, I might not have an objection to them as a class. I might think, as some of my married male friends do, that even if my own wife (suppose I had one, I mean, now) were disappointing to me as a companion and distressing to me because of her unwarranted exactions, my married neighbors may be more lucky. Their wives may be their chums and companions; their wives may not demand a slave's attention, a father's indulgence, a lover's unquestioning devotion, and a rich and doting uncle's unstinted allowance and expect nothing in return.

I visit many homes where I know the husband's business affairs and see the wife's attitude and I feel myself equipped to discuss the question of American wives better, being a bachelor of a somewhat extended and varied acquaintance, than I could if I were married.

There is something essentially faulty in the social relationship of American husbands and wives, which relationship is brought about wholly by the assumption on the part of the wives of rights, privileges and exemptions? These assumptions are of so long standing in America, and have been so meekly and uncomplainingly acquiesced in by the husband that they are looked upon, I suspect, by the wives, as vested rights to question which hints at anarchy. Now, I do not know about that. The husband is bound by every obligation, legal and moral, to give his wife a home and such material comforts as he is able to supply to himself also. Please, observe that "also." Is it not a fact that the American wife of any man above the grade of common, unskilled labor demands—even expects without demanding—comforts and luxuries to which the husband could not also indulge without incurring debts he could not pay if he is less than a merchant or capitalist, and perhaps inviting bankruptcy through extravagance and neglect of business?

Beside sharing in such comforts as the husband's home and board affords, the American wife at once assumes the right to the luxury of idleness. That is a very great deal. It means an additional cost for one or more servants, which cost is imposed upon the husband's earnings, be they large or small. If they are large, I have no complaint. If those earnings are small, then surely the husband has a complaint—but he seldom makes it.

But this is only the beginning. In matters of luxury the American wife not only indulges at his expense in many more than does the husband, but frequently she indulges in many when, and again, therefore, he can indulge in none. What right has she to this? Take the luxury of fine dressing, for example. I know a man—I shall make a homely example—who before his marriage was a noticeably well dressed man. He cared for well made, fresh, nice clothes in a perfectly rational way, and artistically. Now he wears trousers which bag at the knee pitifully, and his coat shines at the elbows and shoulders. He holds a responsible place, and has for years, in a big commercial firm, and I know his salary is not less than $4,000 a year, and I should not be surprised to hear that it was more. I dined with him the other night at his house, and inviting me he said, as he always does, "Don't take the trouble to dress, old man; we'll just dine informally."

Now, he knows perfectly well that it is no trouble for me to dress in the evening, and that I did so nearly every day, and, to tell the truth, this letter was first suggested to me by my conviction that his evening dress suit is in a pretty bad way and he doesn't feel that he can afford the expense of another.

That is one side of the picture; here is the other: Madam appeared in a pretty dainty dinner gown, which she told me was new before I'd been in the house five minutes. I've known her since she was a child.

I'm talking now about the typical American wife of a man who can be said to be in comfortable circumstances by the standards of the best class of salaried men. She is no more extravagant, thoughtless, exacting or unreasonable than the average of her class, was well brought up, helped her mother keep her father's nose to the grindstone always, is bright, good enough natured, if you please, and of course brought her husband not a dollar, for she and her sister and her mother had not left her father a dollar to settle on her. I do not know, thank God, just what the dress I referred to cost, but I know its price would cover my friend's expenditure for clothes for a year. The dinner was good, as she judged it, no doubt, but she did not know what a single dish was to be until it was served.

Now, there is that man earning four or five thousand dollars a year, working from nine in the morning until six in the afternoon fifty weeks a year, dressing like a $40-a-month clerk, not saving a penny, supporting his wife in idle luxury at the cost of probably two-thirds, if not probably three-fourths of his earnings, and she would look in big eyed amazement at any one who should suggest that she was unwarrantably, heartlessly, unreasonably exacting, and enjoying privileges to which she had no manner of right whatever. Furthermore she would call the man a brute who told her so. Is she unique as an American's wife? Well, I rather think not! At any rate I will confidently leave it for married men readers to say.

Let a man overcome anger by love, let him overcome the greedy by liberality, the liar by truth.

JOHN BULL A BULLY.

"Cordially disliked" by Japan, not beloved by China, "without a friend" in Europe, distrusted throughout the vast domain of Russia, holding India and Egypt by the sword, carving up Africa, making enemies every day by her current procedures in Venezuela and Nicaragua, while one of her ablest writers, Admiral Colomb, unblushingly asserts that "the British Empire, being the greatest thing in the world, is in a position to bid defiance to the rest of the world," what friend among the nations has she? Not the United States, surely, for, independently of many other causes that from Mayflower days to this have made her to be regarded as the hereditary enemy of all on this soil, it is not so long ago that Lord Salisbury is alleged to have said, with curt frankness, that "the United States being England's greatest commercial rival, there can be no real friendship between them," an enunciation that the great bulk of the people of the United States will accept with cheerful resignation, and especially those descended from the old colonial stock of Puritan ancestry.

The average Englishman is prone to think that the British flag is invincible; that it has never suffered defeat. On such line of belief is doubtless based the opinion quoted to the effect that "in the event of trouble between the two powers," England and Japan, "the meteor flag of England, carried by English naval vessels and English regiments, would speedily 'burn,' as Thomas Campbell has it, over the sunken navies and scattered armies of Japan." Yet we have but to overhaul the log of memory of our brief day to find that not even the non-soldierly Chinese, who have been so thoroughly beaten in every encounter with the Japanese, on land and sea, during the recent war, inflicted upon "the meteor flag of England" one of the worst defeats it ever sustained. And this on the Pei-ho river on a summer's day in 1859, when the Taku forts beat off, with great slaughter, the British naval force under the command of Admiral Hope. Four of the admiral's gunboats were sunk, forty per cent. of his officers and men were killed or wounded, and the gallant old admiral himself was nearly shot to pieces by the vigorous fire of the enemy.

One-half the pluck and skill displayed by the Chinese on that occasion would have held the Japanese at bay for long and decimating sieges at Port Arthur and Wei-Hai-Wei, perhaps have baffled the arms of Japan for as long a period as the genius of Todleben kept the English and French out of Sebastopol in 1855.

But the average Britisher is singularly oblivious to events that occur beyond the confines of his "tight little island," and it is second nature for him to boast and bluster and to regard himself as the Lord's appointed regulator of the world's affairs and to look upon his country as the natural and invincible master and dictator of modern civilization; but I apprehend that Admiral Freemantle, the commander-in-chief of the British fleet in Oriental waters during the recent hostilities, and his able and alert captains, who have watched with dogged pertinacity and practiced eye every movement of the belligerents in the Yellow Sea, know full well that, in the event of war between Great Britain and Japan, they would have to put their best foot forward to overcome, in any degree, the victory crowned seamen and soldiers who have so humbled the pride of the Chinese, and enable them to flaunt or "burn" in triumph the "meteor flag over the sunken navies and the scattered armies of Japan." They doubtless grasp the fact, too, that an attempted bombardment of Tokio by a British fleet would be no Alexandria affair, and that Gen. Lord Wolseley would find no easy victory, as at Tel-el-Kebir, in an encounter with the battle seasoned armies of the Mikado. Official England, indeed, is by no means anxious to make the boasted "meteor flag terrific burn" at this juncture in a test of arms in that direction, nor, I venture to say, could a dastardly attack like that made on the Danish fleet at Copenhagen, in 1801, be successfully indulged in at this day as regards the gallant fleet that won the fight at Yalu.

On the contrary, the cable and wire apprise us that England has suddenly seen a new light in the East, and though she may not rejoice in the spirit and fullness of the wise men who followed the star of Bethlehem in the days of Herod, the king, she has the canny pounds-shillings-and-pence sense to respect its refulgent light and to hasten to get a share of its reflected gleams. Aye, her greed may be counted on for that!

The United States are and ever have been a better friend of Japan than Great Britain, not only in a political but a commercial sense. The customs returns of Japan show that, as a customer of the empire, the United States, as contrasted with Great Britain, take the products of Japan in the ratio of four silver yen to one. Per contra, Japan buys of Great Britain, as compared with what she buys of the United States, goods of the value of just the reverse ratio. That is to say, the bulk of the money Japan receives from the United States for her products of soil and loom, she, in turn, spends in buying from Great Britain. Now, the trade of which country is of more value to the farmer, the artisan, the merchant, the treasury of Japan? There can be but one answer. Nor is there a more important problem confronting our statesmen of to-day than the solution of the best means of wresting from Great Britain a part of her exporting trade with the valiant Island Queen of the Orient. Would that statesmen of the stanch Americanism of Ambassador Eustis might take up the problem and master it! GEO. L. BELKNAP.

CANINE RIGHTS DEFENDED.

If Plainfield Had Her Fences Up, Dogs Would Be Less Destructive.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—

I read the letter of "Good Morals" and have been awaiting the reply which did not come. I can sympathize with "Good Morals" in his desire not to be led into the use of profane language for I do not use it myself, but there my sympathy ends. I am sorry for his flowers because I love flowers, but I am not sorry for him when he lets them be destroyed, because he should take care of them. In fact I have long thought it high time that the too prevalent but semi-barbarous no-fence fad should be dropped. For myself I would not live in a place unfenced. And when househunting I have sometimes lain awake at night trying to think of some argument in favor of the abolition of fences. Thus far I have found only two. One is economy. The owner saves the price of the fence though it be at the cost of making the town look like a common. The other is the facility afforded to women of the house to slip out at the back door into a neighbor's kitchen whenever they want to pick feathers from the plumage of the other woman across the way. The Puritan fashion of gossiping over the fence was rather public, the modern method is private, and, shall I say it?—more æsthetic.

I once happened to be on hand in a town when a runaway team crossed a sidewalk and entered upon the first garden in a long row of fashionable residences. Two horses and a surrey behind them went straight down the lots, over lawns, flowers and floral beds, till they tangled up in an artistic shrubbery at the last house. Much expressive language resulted, but I could not find anybody who did not regret the absence of fences. From my point of view it seemed a useful lesson, indeed I am not sure that it did not appear rather in the light of a good practical joke, at any rate. I felt no inducement to indulge in unprintable words.

Then the dogs. Anybody who does not love dogs and other animals I would deport to a different civilization, such for instance as might exist in the neighborhood of the Big Horn. Every householder should keep a good dog. But a dog is property. The law has often said so. A licensed law-abiding dog is free of the public thoroughfares. Not even an authorized stealer can legally arrest and do away with him. But how is the poor brute to know just where the sidewalk ends or the property of "Good Morals" begins, if "Good Morals" has not the courtesy to show him?

There is not an unfenced street in Plainfield that would not be improved if the several properties were surrounded by a good fence. It need not be of posts and rails. So I advise "Good Morals" to fence his ground artistically and thereby set his neighbors a good example. He could then cultivate his daffodils with serenity of mind, and on his own admission he would have one less temptation to use improper expletives. Aliquis.

GAVE THE OFFICER A RUN.

Sergeant Kiely Chased a Fleeing Culprit Into the Brook.

While scuffling in the entrance of Music Hall yesterday afternoon with a lot of young street companions William Sodard was thrown against the large lithograph picture frame of the Howard Stock Company and demolished the glass. Manager Presten swore out a warrant for his arrest and placed it in the hands of Sergeant Kiely. As soon as the officer started for the culprit he ran through the theatre and out over the stage into the open lot in the rear of the hall. Here he plunged into the brook, but the Sergeant was close onto his heels and soon captured him. He was taken before Judge Coddington, where he made arrangements to settle for the broken glass. After reprimanding the youngster the Judge suspended sentence on him.

LITTLE EDITH'S FUNERAL.

Impressive Services Over the Remains of a Beloved Child.

The funeral services of little Edith VanWinkle, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. VanWinkle, were held Monday afternoon at 4, from the residence of her parents on Elm place, and were very impressive.

Seldom has such a large concourse of people been present at a similar service. The life of the little one that had so suddenly gone out had left its influence among a large circle of friends.

Rev. Cornelius Schenck conducted the service, which was preceded by the singing of "Precious Jewels" by Elmer E. Runyon. It was a favorite hymn of the little one who had passed away and every evening it was her request before retiring that her mother sing it for her.

The Scripture lesson was read by Mr. Schenck followed by a beautiful prayer. He then spoke very touchingly of her death and in relation to her life said:

"Her character had ripened very quickly, and though young she was wise beyond her years and knowing beyond her days. She was remarkable for her great love of Spiritual things, and when God's mission was perfected in her life He called her home to Himself."

Words of consolation were spoken for the bereaved parents who are so deeply afflicted. At the conclusion of his remarks Mr. Schenck repeated very impressively Longfellow's beautiful poem "The Reaper and the Flowers".

An opportunity was then given those present to look for the last time on the little form that rested so peacefully in the white casket, around which was surrounded a large bank of flowers.

A beautiful floral gift was a small armchair, made of white roses, with the name "Edith" on the back of it. This was presented by Postmaster Hetfield, and the employes of the postoffice.

The burial took place this morning at 11 in the North Plainfield Cemetery. Rev. Cornelius Schenck was present and offered prayer.

Sleep on dear child.
With folded hands upon thy breast.
Sleep on and take thy rest.
The Shepherd of the Heavenly sheep
Hath called thee home, while loved ones weep.
In pastures green, by waters still,
Lambs of His flock shall know no ill.

But, thou art gone!
And the hearth is desolate and lone.
No more the patter of tiny feet.
The childish prattle low and sweet
Shall greet the ear. All's hushed in death.
With bated breath, we cry, Oh! why?

Ah! none can tell.
Save He, who doeth all things well.
Sleep on dear child.
With folded hands upon thy breast.
Sleep on, 'tis thy eternal rest. L. V. I.

Westfield Sewer Muddle.

Petitions are being circulated in Westfield indorsing the action of the Township Committee in the sewer matter. Many who signed the original petition for a sewer are refusing to sign these petitions, claiming that facts were misrepresented at first. The case of certiorari will be heard at Trenton Thursday.

FOR SEWAGE PURPOSES.

The Smock Farm Has Been Purchased by the City Representatives.

A deal was consummated last Friday by the city officials whereby the Smock farm was purchased of Mrs. Dr. Penfield of Park avenue for sewage purposes. The purchase consists of 17 acres of land which is bordered on the south by West Front street, on the north by Green brook, on the west by Rock avenue, and on the east by the property of Isaac Brokaw. This purchase, together with the land bought of the Mutual Life Insurance Company some time ago, which is situated on the opposite side of Rock avenue will give the city plenty of property for sewage disposal.

Negotiations have been going on for some time between the Councilmen and Mrs. Penfield for acquiring the farm for these purposes, but until last week it was impossible for them to come to an agreement on the amount to be paid. The price finally paid was between $8,000 and $9,000.

STUDENT GEOLOGISTS.

A High School Party Enjoy a Trip into the Country.

Geology is being taken up with a good deal of interest by the High School students after George Fountain's talk of Friday morning. Yesterday afternoon a party of young people from the High School, under the leadership of George Fountain and Lyman R. Allen, teacher of the sciences, went on a tour of investigation towards Netherwood and Fanwood. After an interesting search that proved fairly successful the party broke up, some going to visit the water works, others taking the train at Fanwood, and the rest visiting the Fanwood cut and returning home on foot. Among those who spent the afternoon with Mr. Fountain and Mr. Allen were the Misses Florence L. Spaulding, Marie Bourgeois, Helen Osgood, Mabelle Force, Charles Noble, Thomas D. Blair, Edgar I. Serrell, Charles B. Morse, Walter Raynolds, Frederick Coriell, Paul Kimball, Henry Eggerding and Ernest F. Suffren.

NEW BRIDGE AT CLINTON AVENUE.

Joint Committee of Freeholders Decided This Yesterday.

A joint committee from the Union and Somerset County Board of Freeholders visited Plainfield yesterday to investigate as to the need and advisability of building new line bridges over Green brook at Clinton and Giraud avenues. At Clinton avenue the representatives of both boards were in favor of building a new bridge and it was decided to recommend to their respective boards that an iron structure, 24 feet wide, be ordered. Wm. T. Kirk was employed to prepare the necessary plans and specifications. As to the improvement at Giraud avenue the committee was divided, the Union County members favoring the same action as taken at Clinton avenue, and the Somerset members declining to sanction it claiming that the present structure was serviceable for some time to come. Nothing will be done, therefore, at that point.

A Summer Camp for Boys.

Last year some 25 boys of the Junior Department of the Montclair Y. M. C. A. were taken into camp by A. D. French. It was such a success in every way that this year the Montclair boys will go for the first two weeks, and then boys outside of Montclair will be invited for the next two weeks. Mr. French will meet any boys interested at the Y. M. C. A. Building in this city, Saturday evening of this week.

This Is a Good Move.

It has been decided to keep the Y. M. C. A. rooms open every Sunday morning and afternoon from 9 to 10 30 and from 1 to 6, and it is hoped all who can will avail themselves of this opportunity to spend a few hours in a quiet manner.

COL. MOORE IS OUT.

He and Col. Waring Clash Again and the Plainfielder Retires.

From The Press of May 21.

Deputy Street Cleaning Commissioner Charles K. Moore decided yesterday that he would'nt wait for June 1 to leave the department of street cleaning in New York. He wrote the following letter to Col. Waring:

> In view of the financial difficulties which have beset the Street Cleaning Department for which, by the way, I am in no manner responsible, I do not wish to remain in the employ of the department another day. I accordingly ask you to let my resignation, which was to go into effect on Monday, the 3d proximo, go into effect immediately.

Mr. Moore then put on his hat and left the building. He declined to discuss his differences with Col. Waring. After he had gone Col. Waring sent the following to Mr. Moore:

> Dear Sir:—Your resignation of this date is hereby accepted, to take immediate effect.

His successor has not yet been appointed, but there is little doubt that Capt. Gibson, assistant superintendent of stables, is slated for the place. He is a Pennsylvania Democrat.

YELL, YE KRANKS, YELL!

The Y. M. C. A. Baseball Team Will Put Up the Genuine Article.

The Y. M. C. A. baseball team toyed with a picked nine at a practice game on the Crescent Oval Saturday afternoon. For six innings the Y.M.C.A's ran the bases in picnic parties while their opponents chased the twirling sphere to all points of the compass, and at the end the score book recorded 18 runs for the Y. M. C. A. team and three for the players who had been running everywhere but to the bases.

The picked nine were a lot of ambitious young men who lost only because they were outclassed. The most interesting part of the contest was the pitching of Charles Dupee, who is to take John McLaughlin's place in the box for the Y. M. C. A's. This was the first time he had played with the team, and judging from his work Saturday afternoon he has the right sort of stuff in him to make a puzzler for the average batter he will face during the season. Cool and collected, and not easily rattled, he throws a swift ball that has all the intricate and various "shoots" which coax the batter to cut the air more often than to hit the ball. Though of course his balls will be found with greater ease by players more evenly matched, yet it is safe to say that his work, with good field support, will give the team a good record at the end of the season.

Rev. Mr. McKelvey of Warren Chapel held down first base in the game Saturday, and played with a vim that made his friends remember his work on the Princeton College team. It is probable that Mr. McKelvey will become a regular member of the team, though he will be placed elsewhere than on first base because of his small stature.

Some of the ludicrous events of Saturday's game was when George Schoonmaker got hit on the "cocanut" with a ball, but his football hair saved him from a cracked skull. "Ted" Freeman made a great sacrifice when he slid to second base on his new $7 pair of pants to escape a put out and gathered up a bushel or two of soil to take home for the spinach beds.

The players and positions were:

Y. M. C. A.	Position.	Picked Team.
Schoonmaker	Shortstop	Sprowl
Davis	Centrefield	C. P. Sutphen
Dupee	Pitcher	C. Sutphen
Eagan	Catcher	Mumford
Steiner	Third base	Giles
Freeman	Second base	Swalm
Richardson	Rightfield	Rockwell
Stevens	Leftfield	Noname
McKelvey	First base	Douglas

The score by innings was:

Y. M. C. A.	0	0	6	8	3	1	—18
Picked Team	1	0	0	1	0	1	— 3

It is calculated that by next Saturday the uniforms of the Y. M. C. A. club will have arrived, and a game will be arranged with a good club for the afternoon.

The Crescent baseball team of this city went to Westfield Saturday afternoon, where they were defeated by a local team by a score of 13 to 5, the Plainfield boys losing through costly errors. Only two base hits were made off of Van Horn, who was in the box for the Crescents. The score:

Westfield	3	7	0	0	1	2	0	0	0—13

The Crescents will be reorganized this week, and H. Lyons elected to the captainship.

Babcock Building to Be Finished.

The executors of the Babcock estate have decided to go ahead and finish all portions of the Babcock Building. Their first conclusion was to only finish the rooms on the upper floors as they were rented, but it has since been decided that the rooms would find occupants much more rapidly if they were completed.

SIX O'CLOCK.

WEARY WOMEN WATCH FOR THAT BLESSED HOUR.

Help for our Working-Girls and Women Near at Hand.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

ON the stroke of six ends the day's work at stores, offices, factories, mills, where women are employed. But their necessary work at home, sewing, mending, etc., must be done after that time, and "their work is never done."

All women work; some for ambition, some for economy in the household, but the great mass of women work for their daily bread. All are subject to the same physical laws; all suffer alike from the same physical disturbances, and the nature of their duties often quickly drifts them into the horrors of all kinds of female complaints, ovarian troubles, inflammation, ulceration, falling and displacement of the womb, leucorrhœa, and perhaps irregular or suppressed "monthly periods," causing severe backache, loss of appetite, nervousness, irritability and weakness.

Backache, dizziness, fainting, bearing-down, disordered stomach, moodiness, dislike of friends and society—all symptoms of the one cause—will be quickly dispelled. Write Mrs. Pinkham about your trouble.

You can tell the story of [illegible] to a woman, and [illegible] help that only woman [illegible]. Mrs. Pinkham's address is [illegible]

FANWOOD TO BE A BOROUGH

Saturday's Election Will Give the Village a Separate Government.

The Fanwood question of "Borough" or "No Borough" was settled Saturday afternoon from 2 to 7 at the polls, when the borough advocates won a victory by polling 14 more votes than those who were opposed to the village inhabitants withdrawing from the township and forming a municipal government of their own.

The question has long been agitated among the Fanwood people and at the election Saturday afternoon the supporters of each side of the movement worked hard in canvassing for votes at the polls. All the various effects of what a seperation of the village from the township implief have been fully published in the Daily Press.

The vote was as follows: Total votes cast, 63; rejected, 1; for borough, 38; against borough, 24.

In the township there are 75 entitled to vote.

An election for Borough Commissioners will be called at an early date.

READY FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

John Hand Camp Has Lots to Do on the 30th.

The meeting of John Hand Camp, No. 28, Sons of Veterans, last evening was the last before Memorial Day, and considerable business in relation to its observance was transacted.

A detail of two members was assigned to each cemetery in the vicinity, and early Thursday morning, May 30, they will meet and with flowers and minature flags visit the cemeteries and mark the graves of all Sons of Veterans whether or not they were members of a camp.

In connection with this the Camp desires all persons who know where Sons of Veterans are buried to communicate with First Sergeant Horace J. Martin on Somerset, either by letter or in person. The Memorial committee made a report stating what had been done. It was learned that the citizens of Scotch Plains were planning a programme to supplement the one of the Sons of Veterans and would be followed out in connection with the latter.

As the first anniversary of the Camp will soon be here, a committee was appointed to arrange for proper celebration of it.

A communication was received from a committee of the Red Men, in regard to the celebration of the Fourth of July, who asked that a committee be appointed to confer with a large committee that would meet June 3, to form plans for the celebration. A committee of three was appointed.

Big Real Estate Deal.

Lyman & Petrie consummated a very large real estate deal Saturday evening, when all the property belonging to the Plainfield Land Improvement Company, located the other side of the electric railroad car house on West Fourth street was sold to A. O. Symington of Thomasville, Ga. It includes about 40 acres and will be improved and cut up into building lots.

NO WORD FROM HIBBITTS.

The Amount of His Shortage is Already Over $800.

Further investigations in regard to the disappearance of John Hibbitts, shows no trace of his whereabout.

Mr. Hibbitts took the representative to his son's property in the West End and told him that he could levy on it if he desired, as he was not willing to mortgage his property for that purpose. He preferred that an effort be made to capture John and hold him good for it.

The representative and Mr. Hibbitts are this afternoon in consultation over the matter. Mr. Hibbitts said that on Friday last John drew $150 from the bank where he was a depositor.

The investigation of the accounts show that the deficiency amounts to $800, and Auditor Hartney is still at work on the books.

No news has yet been received that would indicate the whereabouts of the missing man.

MEET AND DEFEAT ALL COMERS.

The Park Whisters Latest Victims Are the Harlem Experts.

The Park Club whisters have got so in the habit of conquesting every team with whom they play that it was simply a matter of course with them last night when they defeated the 12-men team of the Harlem Experts, who came out for a friendly game, and incidentally to win whatever laurels they might from the Jersey champions.

The 12-men team was a little change from the games of four and six men which the Parks have been indulging in principally during the season, and was therefore conducive to more interest than it would have been otherwise.

The "N. and S." and "E. and W." in the following score designate the positions of the players at the various tables, whether sitting north and south or east and west:

Parks.			Harlem.
Howell and Rogers	N. and S.	159	Hebbard and Spear	E. and W.	153
Townsend and McCutchen	E. and W.	170	Delmoise and Hildredth	N. and S.	142
Dupee and McGee	N. and S.	153	Adams and Grace	E. and W.	159
Reed and Reed	E. and W.	159	Daniels and Coffin	N. and S.	153
Sandford and Leonard	N. and S.	147	Todd and Withington	E. and W.	165
Matthews and Peck	E. and W.	165	Crall and Kopper	N. and S.	147
		953			919

The difference in the total scores between the two clubs is divided by 2 and this gives the correct number of points by which the game was won by the Parks, which is 17.

After the game a light lunch was served by Steward Jones.

THE "FLOWER QUEEN."

The Cantata to be Given in Vincent Chapel, June 11.

Root's cantata of the 'Flower Queen' is to be given for the benefit of the Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. Church in Vincent Chapel, Tuesday evening, June 11. An effective chorus has been organized and soloists have been secured. Mrs. Metta Horton Cook, a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, who has given the cantata with great success in several New England cities, will have full direction, and a fine performance may be assured. The ladies will serve cake and ice cream at the close of the entertainment, and as the tickets will be placed at a popular figure the chapel should be crowded on that occasion. Further particulars will be given in the advertisement to appear in The Daily Press at a later date.

AN INCREASE IN WAGES.

Walter Scott Gives His Employes the Benefit of Increased Business.

The employes of the Scott Printing Machine Works who accepted a reduction in wages some weeks ago, as was exclusively reported in The Daily Press, were notified last Saturday night that commencing this morning all workmen who were effected by the reduction, would receive an increase of 10 cents a day.

The announcement was received with much gratification by all who come under the scope of the new order. The decrease in salaries was made at a time when business was stagnant but since then trade has become more brisk and Mr. Scott, with his accustomed fairness, immediately gave the workmen the benefit of it. As the volume of business increases the wages will be gradually increased until the employes are paid the old schedule of rates. The reductions that were made varied from 15 to 40 cents a day, according to the kind of work that the men were employed on.

BOWLING ON THE GREEN.

Mr. and Mrs. Schepflin Provided This Pleasant Pastime Saturday.

The Middlesex Bowling Club, the New Jersey Bowling Club and a few other guests were entertained Saturday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. Christian Schepflin at their home in Dunellen. The principal pastime enjoyed was bowling on the green.

The members of the Middlesex club were H. Brewster Willis, skip, Peter Fisk, Christian Schepflin and Dr. Richter. Those of the New Jersey club were Wm. Elliott skip, James Smyth John Young and Wm. Low. In the game between the two clubs Middlesex made a score of 21 and New Jersey 11.

A two-men team made up of John Winning and Alexander Murray against Col. Charles H. Moore and Ralph W. Booth, resulted in a victory for the latter by a score of 1 to 18.

A three-men team was then formed as follows: John Winning, Charles Westervelt and Ralph Booth against Col. Moore. Dr. Pettit and Alexander Murray. The first team won by a score of 21 to 16, and a second game was played which resulted in a victory for Col. Moore's team.

Mr Winning is the chief engineer of the White Star Steamship Company of England, and is a very pleasant gentleman to meet. He is considered to be the most expert bowler in England, and Col. Moore and his friends are to be congratulated on having defeated him.

HOTEL GRENADA IMPROVEMENTS.

Extensive and Desirable Alterations to Be Made at This Popular House.

Next week the ground floor of the Hotel Grenada will undergo extensive alterations, which will make it much more desirable and convenient for transient and family trade. Where the dining room is now situated a partition will be built in the centre of the room and the office and reading room removed there, making a handsome front of the centre store. The dining room will be placed back of the office and the present small room in the rear used for this purpose. The cafe will then be extended, to the street front and a screen and swinging doors built in front of the bar, thus giving its patrons access from the street, instead of walking through the cluttered office as is now the case. The rooms will be redecorated and the office carpeted so that when the alterations are completed they will make an imposing front.

Patriotism in Scotch Plains.

The citizens of Scotch Plains are planning for an enjoyable celebration of Memorial Day, and have taken steps to assist the Sons of Veterans materially. It is proposed to have the fire department and lodges turn out and act as an escort. The school children have been interested, and will collect flowers for the decoration of the graves.

HIGH SCHOOL FIELD DAY.

The Event Will Bring Student Athletes From All Over Jersey.

Active preparations are now being made for the field day of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association which is to be held at the Crescent Oval, Saturday, June 8. For the last four years, a field day has been held every Spring and Fall; last Spring a very successful one, both financially and otherwise, took place. This year, however, the field day is expected to far outshine any of its predecessors. The events are as follows: 2-mile bicycle race; 1-mile bicycle race; ½-mile bicycle race; 100 yards dash; 440 yards run; running high jump; pole vault; putting the shot. They are open to all Preparatory and High Schools within 20 miles of Plainfield. The Rutgers' and Steven's Preparatory Schools both expect to enter their teams in the contests, while many other schools will also be represented. Despite the loss of some of the High School's best athletes, it is hoped that this institution will continue to hold its usual high position in athletics among the New Jersey schools.

The committee in charge of the arrangements consists of Charles B. Morse, chairman, Lewis H. Rand, Carlos C. Gallup, George P. Smith, and Edgar I. Serrell. C. C. Gallup acts as corresponding secretary of the committee, and Charle Noble as recording secretary.

It Is Always Thus.

Once more the results of what The Daily Press can do in finding lost articles appear in evidence. One day last week an item was published exclusively in The Press that George O. Stevens, the West End coal merchant, had lost a horse blanket through theft. A day or two after he received word that if he would call at a West Third street saloon he could regain the property, where it had been left by some one. Mr. Stevens called at the place and recovered the blanket. However, Mr. Stevens would have still been out the blanket except that the saloon keeper saw the item in The Press and sought the owner in that way.

Deserve to Be Patronized.

May Mulford, Louise Gilmore, Isabelle Edwards and Violet Beerbower, four bright, active girls, called at The Daily Press office today and gave a glowing account of an elaborate fair that is going to be held on the lawn at the residence of Louise Gilmore 117 West Second street, Saturday afternoon and evening. Lots of good things will be on sale and there will be music in the evening. The proceeds will be given to the poor. If stormy it will be postponed one week.

Sir Knights to Be Addressed.

Rev. Dr. Stockton of Orange will deliver an address to the members of Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, in the Grace Episcopal Church Thursday evening. The Knights of St. John's Commandery of Elizabeth will be the guests of the Plainfield Knights. The members will march in full uniform from the asylum to the church at 7.

To Attend a Church Convention.

Rev. Dr. Lewis, Editor Livermore of the Sabbath Recorder, and Mrs. Livermore, leave tomorrow morning for Marlboro, N. J., to attend the Eastern Seventh-Day Baptist Association which will be in session Thursday and Friday. Dr. Lewis will return in time for the Grand Army service in the Seventh-Day Baptist Church next Sunday evening.

To Read Papers.

Mrs. W. M. Maxson and Miss Lou Clawson will go to Marlboro, Friday morning, to attend the Seventh-Day Baptist Association. They both have papers to present before that body: Mrs. Maxson on the Junior Christian Endeavor work and Miss Clawson on Christian Endeavor work.

MERRY DANCERS.

Daughters of Liberty Have a Pleasant Event in Red Men's Hall.

From The Press of May 22.

A jolly party of 150 young people attended the dance of Lucetta Council, No. 21, Daughters of Liberty, in Red Men's hall last night and enjoyed themselves until the small hours of this morning. The hall had been patriotically hung with the Stars and Stripes, which were tastefully arranged. The women who were on the committee of arrangements also wore red, white and blue aprons as a symbol of their order.

Though the Daughters of Liberty were the hostesses they were obliged to fall back on a Son of Liberty to head their committee of arrangements, and this duty devolved upon Gilbert S. Martin, who performed the various functions of the place in a manner that was as graceful as efficient. He was assisted by Mrs. A. Angleman, Mrs. J. W. Robinson, Mrs. W. W. Stratton, Mrs. A. K. Mattis and Miss Laura Johnson. The floor manager was W. W. Stratton, assisted by T. A. Kurzhals.

During the intermission refreshments were served in the banquet room on the floor above. Guttman's orchestra furnished the music.

SWEET MUSIC.

Rutgers College Glee Club Provide a Delightful Entertainment.

The lovers of good vocal music who attended the concert given in the Y. M. C. A. hall last evening by the Rutgers College Glee Club heard the rendition of the songs in a manner that is not often listened to in this city.

The club is composed of twelve young men whose efforts last night displayed careful training and frequent rehearsals, so that their clear-toned voices blended and harmonized into a volume of sweet music. No better evidence of how well their hearers appreciated their songs is needed than the fact that they were obliged to respond to every number on the programme with from one to three encores.

The programme was composed mostly of pieces of the familiar college character—more topical than sentimental—and were thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. The members of the Glee Club are: George Wilmot, leader; Alfred Gregor, Waldo Rosencrans, Stanley Jones, Isaac Enyard, George Vaules, Alexander Way, William VanDyke, Lester E. Inglis, John B. Vorhees, Herbert Wyckoff, John LeMoine Damer. The accompanist was George Nutman.

HEAD OF THE MEAT TRUST.

Phil. D. Armours Modest Beginning as a Farmer Boy.

Philip D. Armour's first great operation in provisions was in New York City in the spring of 1865. Born in Northern New York in 1832, he was apprenticed to a farmer. He went to California during the height of the gold excitement, in 1852, and accumulated a modest income. In 1858 he went to Milwaukee and, with John Plankinton, formed the partnership of Plankinton & Armour, in the pork packing business.

In 1865 he and his partner thought the rebellion was about over. Pork was selling at $40 a barrel and the New York operators, who thought the rebellion was nowhere near an end, were buying all that was offered, spot and future, believing that it would go up to $60. Carefully arranging his plans, Armour came to New York and began selling pork short.

His advent caused a sensation, but the sharpers here thought they had a soft thing and bought all the pork that Armour could sell. He was so persistent that he broke the market. In a short time came the news of the fall of Petersburg, then of Richmond and then of the surrender of Lee, and Armour bought in the pork he had sold at $40 at $18 a barrel.

His success in this one deal made him a millionaire. His operations expanded, too, and from the small packer he became the largest pork and beef dealer in the world. He established packing houses in Chicago and Kansas City, and in 1875 went to Chicago to live.

He revolutionized the beef packing and cattle buying business there, and now in his various establishments throughout the country, employs more than 12,000 men. The yearly distributive sales of his Chicago house alone are in excess of the gross annual receipts of any railroad in the world. The value of his business annually is estimated to be somewhere in the neighborhood of $120,000,000.

He has had few setbacks in his business operations, though he has dealt in grain as well as provisions and has engineered several big deals. In 1878 it appeared to many that there would be an enormous supply of pork and that the product was likely to become very cheap. Operators in the Chicago Board of Trade thought it a good time to make money and began selling pork. It happened that Armour was manufacturing more pork than ever and was forced by the speculators to support the market. It took more than $2,000,000 for him to keep the price up, and in the spring of 1879 he had effected a deal with other packers by means of which, though there was still plenty of hogs, the manufactured product became scarce.

How this was done Mr. Armour knows only, but the fact remains that the price of pork began to climb and kept steadily rising until Armour had recovered all his losses and made two or three million dollars besides.

Many of the small fry speculators who were on the side of the bear combination were ruined, and the big operators and other packers conceived a respect for Armour's ability which has since never been lessened, nor permitted them to attempt to do anything with beef or pork which was not in line with his always well known interests.

His wealth is put down at $40,000,000. He is a most affable man in business affairs, and popular socially. He is an indefatigable worker, being engaged in his office daily from 7 A. M. to 6 P. M. He is also a very charitable man, giving away thousands of dollars annually to deserving charities.

He has two sons, Philip D. Armour, Jr., and Jonathan Ogden Armour. They are both partners in their father's business, and are fully as shrewd and capable business men.

The Secret of His Success.

A lady once crossed a street where a little boy was busily sweeping the crossing. She noticed with pleasure the care with which he did his work and smiled as she said to him, "Yours is the cleanest crossing I pass." He lifted his cap with a gallant air and quickly said, "I am doing my best."

All day the words rang in her ears, and for many days afterward; and when a friend, a rich, influential man, inquired for a boy to do errands and general work for him she told him of the little fellow at the crossing. "A boy who would do his best at a street crossing is worth a trial with me," said the man, and he found the boy, engaged him for a month, and at the end of that time was so pleased with him that he sent him to school and fitted him for a high position, which he filled with honor. "Doing my best at the street crossing, made a successful man of me," he was wont to say in after years."—Home.

Getting Real Comfort.

"I owe more comfort," said Mr. Johnson, "to my shoemaker than I do to any other man."

"Why, how is that," said Mr. Billings, "when you are always complaining about tight shoes?"

"Well, every evening when I take off my shoes and put on my slippers the comfort I feel is simply intense!"—Youth's Companion.

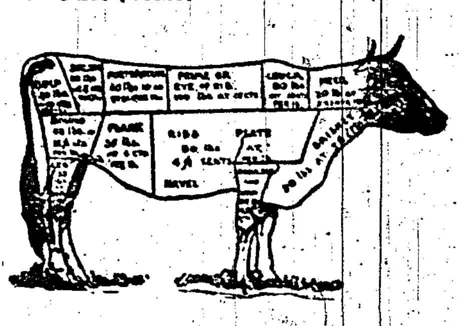
HOW A STEER IS CUT UP.

The Chicago Trust Has Paralyzed the Whole Meat Industry.

Careful study of the accompanying diagram of a prime steer as it reaches the wholesale butcher from either of the local establishments of the Chicago "Big Three," or their New York allies, will clear up many statements that have been published since the cattle combine put the screws on and made beef dearer.

"Such beef as I handle," said a dealer, "will weigh 800 pounds, that is two sides will weigh 400 pounds each. This is dressed beef, all of which is cut up and sold. There is no waste. The fat and bones are sold. Such extras as you see on the butchers' stalls as brains, tongues, liver, tripe, oxtails, etc., do not come to us as dressed beef. These are special lines handled by special men.

"There is a steer," and the dealer pointed through the glass door of a refrigerator, "that weighed 800 pounds when laid on these scales to-day. I paid 9 cents a pound for it. Don't believe these 11 and 12 cents stories, for they are not true. It cost me $72 at the warehouse. I hauled it here, must pay my men to cut it up and deliver it and all that. What will I get for what cost me $72? Just $75.26.



"A steer goes into an abbatoir on the hoof and every ounce of him goes out a commercial commodity. A 1,200 pound steer will net 800 pounds of beef. The hide is sold to the tanners. A limited number of tails go to dealers in ox tails and special dealers buy the tongues, which are sold to delicatessens here, and in Chicago go to the canners of 'lunch tongues.' There is a limited demand for brains. All livers find a ready sale, and the lining of the paunch, known as tripe, is growing in such favor that it is all disposed of to dealers who pickle it.

"From the pure fat is extracted the highest quality of oleo oil. This is generally exported to Holland, where it enters into the make up of the gilt edged Dutch butter that commands fancy prices in England. From other fats come the lower grades of oleo oil. From selected bones are secured, by boiling, gelatine, which is the basis of all cheap jellies and marmalades. Stearine, used as a base of chewing gum and for many other purposes, is the product left from the process of pressing out oleo oil.

"All hoofs are boiled, and the valuable commodity known as neat's foot oil is secured. The horns are sold to manufacturers of combs and fancy goods. The hoofs after boiling are also used in the making of horn ornaments. Everything that is left, blood, entrails, etc., is made into fertilizing material, not the least valuable commodity turned out of the abbatoir. I have no positive figures, but I believe that the 400 pounds of 'offal,' the term used as applying to everything except the actual beef, will net the killer from $20 to $22. The wholesale slaughterer does not get any of the worst of it at any stage of the game."

68 EX-BANKERS IN ONE JAIL.

Remarkable Colony of Prisoners in Kings County Penitentiary.

Former bank officers to the number of sixty-eight, all serving sentences in one penitentiary! That is the remarkable fact which will appear in the forthcoming report of Warden Hayes, of the Kings County Penitentiary.

To be more explicit, there are now within the cold gray and black walls of that institution seven men who, when arrested for embezzlement of depositors' funds, were presidents of national banks; twelve men who, when rounded up in a career of crime by the strong arm of the law, were honored and respected cashiers of national banks, and forty-nine other men who were trusted clerks or tellers in banks of the same class.

The Kings County Penitentiary is one of the five penal institutions in the country which, under contract with the general government, keep in confinement all prisoners convicted of felonies by United States courts. The other prisons that board Uncle Sam's lawbreakers are that at Albany, the Erie County Penitentiary, near Buffalo; the House of Correction, at Detroit, and the most impregnable prison in the world, the Minnesota State Penitentiary, at Stillwater, Minn.

The percentage of former bank officials at Albany, Erie, Detroit and Stillwater will average the same as at the Kings County institution. The total number is equally divided between the five prisons. There are at present 405 "boarders" at Kings, of whom sixty-eight are from banks. The total number of bank defaulters, embezzlers and wreckers formerly connected with national banks alone will, therefore, approximate 340, or about one-sixth of the total number of Federal prisoners in confinement for felonies.

"Yes," said the warden, "I could fit a bank out with a president and a full force down to, but not including, the janitor. It is a remarkable fact, which I have verified by looking over the records, that although there have been confined in this prison since it began to receive United States prisoners, twelve or fifteen years ago, a total of 130 bank officers and clerks, we have never as yet had a janitor or watchman or runaway messenger."

Good people shine from afar, like snowy mountains; bad people are not seen, like arrows shot by night.

MR. HUBBARD'S BOARD.

It Is Organized for Effective County Work.

STANDING COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

Tax Levy to Be $185,000, Appropriated Judiciously Among the Departments—Freeholder Tier at the Head of the Plainfield Bridge Committee.

The Board of Freeholders met Thursday afternoon. The organization for the year was completed by Director Hubbard appointing the standing committees and the bridge committees for districts outside of Elizabeth.

The appropriations for the year were also fixed. The committee reported that after a careful estimate of the necessities for the several departments of the county, the $19,000 of principal to be paid on the bonded debt, the bonded debt interest and the large lunacy expense over which the Board has no control, they concluded that a total tax levy of $185,000, with the $21,500 assets of the county added, would be sufficient. They recommended, therefore, that $185,000 be raised by taxation, and that it, together with the assets, be divided among the several departments for which appropriations are made as follows:

Court expenses	$38,000
County jail	6,500
Care of lunatics	32,000
Members' salaries and expenses	8,500
Coroner's fees	1,000
Election	10,000
Advertising and publishing	2,500
Stationery	3,000
Incidentals, schools, burial of soldiers, etc	10,000
Hospitals	4,000
Principal of bonded debt	19,000
Interest on bonded debt	20,000
Interest on temporary loans	1,000
Public grounds and buildings	7,000
Bridges and culverts	23,000
County roads	15,000

The Board received the report and adopted the recommendation of the committee.

Director Hubbard named the standing committees. The only changes from last year were the appointment of Mr. Farrell of Rahway to all committees on which Mr. Howard had served, and the correction of what he said was a mistake he made last year in naming Mr. Clark on only two committees and Mr. Haliday on four. Director Hubbard apologized to Mr. Clark and appointed him on the Public Grounds and Buildings Committee, instead of Mr. Haliday.

The following are the committees as they are now constituted:

Collector's Bond—Messrs. Morrell, Miller and Haliday.

Publication—Messrs. Hulskamper, Badgley and Swain.

Settle With Collector—Messrs. Littell, Farrell and Krause.

Audit Accounts—Messrs. Ogden, Roll and Woodruff.

Lunacy—Messrs. Miller, Westcott and Clark.

Public Grounds and Buildings—Messrs. Farrell, Ogden and Clark.

Jail Inspection—Messrs. Tier, Krause and Woodruff.

Stationery—Messrs. Littell, Hulskamper and Swain.

Legal Questions—Messrs. Ehrlich, Tien and Woodruff.

Appropriations — Messrs. Farrell, Ogden, Littell, Haliday and Clark.

Rahway Drawbridges — Messrs. Ehrlich, Farrell and Haliday.

Elizabeth Drawbridges — Messrs. Miller, Morrell and Hulskamper.

Counts Roads—Messrs. Roll, Ogden, Littell, Krause and Swain.

On resolution of Mr. Littell, the Director was made a member of all committees.

Mr. Roll offered a resolution authorizing the County Collector to print his report and the reports of the standing committees im pamphlet form not to exceed 500 copies, and to publish his report in the papers authorized by law, including The Constitutionalist, weekly issue of The Daily Press.

This resolution was adopted.

The Director and County Collector were given authority to borrow in anticipation of taxes money not to exceed $50,000.

Mr. Farrell moved a committee of five be appointed to superintend the widening of the Grand street bridge in Rahway, as provided for by resolution at former meeting. The resolution was adopted and the committee appointed were: Messrs. Farrell, Ehrlich, Ogden, Roll and Woodruff.

Mr. Woodruff moved that a committee be appointed to examine the Walnut street bridge in Roselle, and report on the advisability of rebuilding it.

The motion was adopted, and Director Hubbard appointed as the committee: Messrs. Woodruff, Hulskamper and Badgley.

Other committees were appointed as follows:

Plainfield bridges—Messrs. Tier, Roll, Ogden, Westcott and Clark.

Cranford—Messrs. Littell, Krause, Miller, Westcott and Haliday.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Charles Lister has sold a Keating wheel to Franklin B. Lord of New York.

Miss Maude Van Dyke of East Front street has a handsome new wheel that will prove a real pleasure to her during the Summer months.

The drivers of wagons and carriages have secured the passage of laws regulating the use of bicycles on the various State and County roads. But it is becoming daily a more and more noticeable fact that many of these same drivers of wagons do not accord to the bicycler the rights they themselves enjoy under the laws. It is now a common occurrence for teamsters to drive in the middle of the road and compel the wheelman to turn over on the rough dirt at the side of the macadam. The wheelman is entitled to one-half the road, and it is often dangerous for him to run his wheel over the ruts that always exist at the side of every county thoroughfare. Bicycles today are more numerously seen along the roads than all other vehicles, and the cyclists are growing in numbers every day. They are held accountable for their every violation of the restrictive and just laws governing the use of vehicles. Many of these rules, however, can be violated only by a bicycle rider. While the wheelman is compelled to abide by the law, the riders in other vehicles should also be compelled to accord to him his full rights and privileges under the law, and should be punished for their many and gross violations of the laws governing the rules of the road.

M. E. SUPPER AND SALE.

Good Time Enjoyed by a Throng in Vincent Chapel.

The promise of a good supper usually attracts a crowd, and the supper and sale given last Friday by the Ladies Aid Society of the First M. E. Church in Vincent Chapel was no exception. From 6 until 8 the waitresses were kept busy supplying the needs of the incoming tide of diners. After the supper was concluded, a social time was enjoyed by all, while Miss Filmer rendered several vocal solos and Miss Cara Peck read an interesting paper on the work among the Indians.

The supper was arranged by a committee of which Mrs. N. W. Pike was the very efficient chairman. She was ably assisted in her work by Mrs. S. C. Baker, Mrs. Rugg, Miss Susie Jackson, Miss Minnie Sharp, Mrs. J. McNorton, Mrs. J. S. King, Mrs. Humble, Mrs. I. McVoy and Mrs. G. Q. Packer.

The waitresses were Miss Bertha Jenkins, Miss Alice Jenkins, Miss C. Florence Barnes, Miss Bessie Day, Miss Madeline Day, Miss Edna Harris, Miss Eva Jenkins, Miss Edna French, Miss Bessie Valiant, Miss Mattie Humble, Miss Flora Campbell, and Miss Lizzie Stackhouse.

The cake table was under the control of Mrs. C. E. Horne, Mrs. H. A. McGee and Mrs. Peck.

The ever-favorite candy table was very popular and here Mrs. N. Y. Hull, Miss Elsie Horne, Miss Bessie Cornwell and Miss Sarah Douglass supplied the steady demand for good things.

During the evening the Epworth League held an important business meeting.

After the reading of the minutes of the last two meetings, the reports of the various committees were made. After some discussion it was decided that two delegates, appointed by the president, should be sent to the State Convention to be held in Elizabeth. The president announced as his choice: Miss Gertrude Sharp and Robert Davis.

After further discussion it was decided to send one delegate to the National Convention to be held in Chatanooga, June 28. Miss Ida Angleman was elected delegate.

The annual election of officers followed, and resulted as follows: President, Robert Davis; first vice-president, Miss M. Sharp; second vice-president, Miss Smalley; third vice-president, D. S. Dunavan; fourth vice-president, Miss Elsie Horne; secretary, Miss Ida Angleman; treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Corwell.

Progressive Women.

The last meeting for the season of the Plainfield Branch Alliance of Unitarian and other Christian women will be held in All Souls Church, Tuesday afternoon, May 28, when papers will be read on "Manufactories and Industries of Plainfield", and the "Public School System". On the first subject the following points will be discussed by different women: Number, age and sex of factory employes; length of hours and regulation for health and comfort; wages and cost of living; to what extent is work done in homes. The second subject will be discussed under these heads: Is it effective, progressive and satisfactory; Kindergartens and manual training; compulsory education.

ELLIOTT WILL CASE ENDED.

Settlement of an Estate of $75,000.

An important will case was decided in the Orphans Court in New Brunswick yesterday by Judge Rice that will interest Plainfielders.

Mrs. Elizabeth Elliott who formerly lived on Park avenue this city died November 2, 1894, leaving four children. Before her death she secured Justice Storms of New Market to draw her will. She left considerable of her real and personal property to her children and a legacy of $1 a day for life to her stepdaughter, Mrs. Anna L. Silveria of Brooklyn.

The will was offered for probate Nov. 23, 1894. At the same time Lawyer George DeMeza filed a caveat against the admission of the will to probate for the following reasons: First—That at the time of making of said alleged last will said Elizabeth Elliott was not of sound mind. memory and understanding, sufficient to make and publish a will and testament. Second—That the making of said alleged will was procured through undue influence. Third—That said paper, purporting to be the last will and testament, presented for probate, was not the last will and testament of the said Elizabeth Elliott.

Since the time the will was offered, the case has been in the court. Foley & Powell of New York and Alan Strong counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company were in opposition to the breaking of the will and the case was very strongly contested. Lawyer DeMeza argued the case alone and worked hard for the children.

Judge Rice rendered his decision yesterday and decided that the will be set aside, and declared the same invalid. This gives to the children the entire real and personal property of the late Elizabeth Elliott, which will amount to about $75,000, and includes the Lakewood Hotel at Lakewood. The children are now living in Dunellen.

TWO BALL TEAMS.

Plainfield's Y. M. C. A. Hustling Sporting Matters.

Another meeting of those interested in baseball will be held in the Y.M.C.A. Building this evening, when the committee having charge of the matter of raising a subscription for the purpurchase of uniforms will report what progress has been made. There seems to be little question that the necessary $70 will be raised, and the uniforms will probably be ordered immediately. They will be of gray material, with "Y. M. C. A." lettered in red on the breast.

Arrangements have been made for a game between the Y. M. C. A. and Arlington teams on the Crescent grounds at 3:30 next Saturday. The former team will be the same as that of last Saturday, when Westfield was defeated, with the exception of John McLaughlin, who has signed with Somerville, and will be succeeded by A.C.Wyckoff, who will play first base. Harry Bogert will become the regular pitcher. It is the intention of Physical Director MacPhie, as soon as the uniforms are received, to arrange a game with the Princeton Browns, one of the crack college teams, and thereafter provide a good game once a week, charging an admission fee to the grounds and running stages for the accommodation of the patrons, of which there will be a great many.

A second Y. M. C. A. team will also probably be organized to play with the local teams who feel that the regular team is too strong for them.

Before the end of the season Mr. MacPhie hopes to arrange a game with the Indian nine of the Onondago reservation, whose playing is not only first-class, but also adds an element of novelty for the kranks who attend.

The only regret that can be entertained concerning the permanent organization of the Y. M. C. A. team is that it came so late, by reason of which the Somerville club secured the services of John and Robert McLaughlin, the crack battery, who would have played with the local team had the permanent organization come a little earlier. But as it is the city has a bangup aggregation, and let the rooters turn out in swarms and root for them to win not only by talk but by financial aid.

Found the Jewels.

Mr. and Mrs. William Wilder of Central avenue returned home from Canada Thursday, where they have been visiting, and on unpacking their trunks were startled at being unable to find a valuable set of diamonds which had been placed in the trunks on the departure from Canada. The baggage was examined by the Custom House inspectors at the border, and fears were entertained that the jewels had been stolen in transit. After two days of diligent search they were finally found, having been mislaid in one of the compartments of a trunk.

Accepted a Better Position.

Fletcher Hallock, who has been with the sewer department of the city engineer's office, leaves Monday for White Plains to superintend the construction of an electric road.

THIS NEWS IS GOOD.

Coal Has Dropped in Price in Plainfield.

DEALERS TAKE UNITED ACTION.

They Follow the Lead of the Elizabeth Merchants, as Was Urged by The Daily Press, and Wise Householders Will Make Immediate Provision for Their Next Season's Stock.

The members of the New Jersey Coal Exchange, composed of the coal dealers along the line of the Central between Roselle and Somerville, and of which the merchants in this city are influential members, have at last recognized the demand for lower rates on domestic coal, and, following out the suggestions in The Daily Press of a few days ago, have reduced the cost 50 cents per ton, making all grades $4.50 per ton. The change took effect yesterday, and was accomplished at a meeting of the members of the Exchange in J. D. Thickstun's office in this city Tuesday evening.

Consumers have long felt that the rates have been kept unduly high at all times of the year, in the towns affected by the Exchange, but the combine of dealers has been powerful enough to crush out all competition that would tend to lower the rates to consumers. In Elizabeth, where the wholesale cost of coal is practically the same as in Plainfield, the dealers have been selling at retail for $4.50 a ton, and very recently reduced it 35 cents for the Summer. In doing this they give the consumer some of the benefit of the reduction which they get from the mines.

This action on the part of the Elizabeth dealers was the real cause of the combine making the reduction of 50 cents, because the dealers in Roselle and Cranford are obliged to compete with the Elizabeth merchants, when there is a difference of 85 cents in the cost of a ton of coal between these places.

Thus it will be seen that the merchants in Plainfield, Dunellen, Somerville and Westfield were obliged to come down in their rates, because it would be manifestly unfair for them to compel the Cranford and Roselle members of the combine to meet Elizabeth competition, while they maintained the high prices. And again it was necessary to do this to keep the Exchange intact, from the fact that if the organization had refused to make a reduction it is probable that the Roselle and Cranford dealers would have dropped out, and thus weakened it to a certain extent, when a time came for the raising of rates again.

Nearly all local dealers have sent out notices of reduction and there will probably be a great rush among householders to put in their Winter supply before the prices are put up for the Fall.

The present rate is the lowest that Plainfield has enjoyed in years.

Rare Books Bestowed.

The N. J. Historical Society has recently received as gifts from Dr. J. Ackerman Coles of Scotch Plains the two following rare and valuable works from the library of his father, the late Dr. Abraham Coles, viz: "The History of the Chinese Empire, containing a general description of its country, cities, villages, market-towns, seaports, government, religion, arts, animals, birds, insects, reptiles, fishes, trees, plants, fruits, seeds, etc., by Srs. Pierre de Goyer, Jacob de Keyser, Jean Nieuhoff and Jean le Cardentier, dedicated to Jean Baptiste Colbert, the distinguished Minister of Finance under Louis XIV, consisting of two large volumes bound together in full leather and elegantly illustrated with full-page, copper-plate engravings; printed and published in French, at Leyden, for Jacob de Meurs, chief bookseller and engraver of the city of Amsterdam, 166 ."

Additional value attaches itself to this volume by reason of its title page being stamped "Bibliotheque du Roy, Neuilly". The royal chateau of Neuilly was built in the reign of Louis XV; it was the favorite Summer residence of Louis Philippe, but was destroyed during the Revolution of 1848. This book, however, escaped destruction, and save the borings of the bookworm, which rather add to than diminish its value, after the lapse of more than 230 years it is in a most excellent state of preservation.

The other work is entitled: "Hyak Nin Is'shiu, or Stanzas by a Century of Poets", consisting of Japanese lyrical odes, in the original text, with English translations, explanatory notes and a full index, by F. V. Dickins, M. B., London, Smith, Elder & Co., 18 6.

Both of the above are beautifully printed and are very interesting as well as useful additions to the collections of the society.

GREAT ARE THE PARKS.

Again They Prove Their Mettle at the Whist Tables.

The Park Club whisters Thursday added another victory to their long line of conquests during the Winter months, ranging from the defeat of the best clubs in the country to the unknown players of some of Jersey's little towns. The victory of last night was the winning over the Fanwood Club of the four-men team championship of the New Jersey Whist League tournament, of which the Parks already held the two and six-men team championships.

In March the various clubs of the League met at Orange and the Fanwood and the Park clubs were tied for first place in the four men contest. Arrangements were made to play off the tie, best two out of three. The first game was won by the Parks; and the second, played in the rooms of the Elizabeth Chess and Whist Club last night, was also won by the Parks by two points, and with it the championship trophy, which is a challengeable one.

The scores:

McCutcheon and Rogers		Worth and Kieb

HYMENEAL.

Pearson—Hoff.

The wedding of Charles O. Pearson to Miss Minnie E. Hoff took place May 15, last evening. Owing to the fact that Rev. C. E. Herring, pastor of the bride, had an engagement in New York, Rev. Cornelius Schenck performed the ceremony which made husband and wife. The bride was attired in white brilliantine and tulle with white sateen trimmings, and carried a bouquet of white roses and pinks. Miss Ada Wagner was the bridemaid and was attired in white china silk with pale blue trimmings, and carried a bouquet of pink roses and pinks. The bridemaid was assisted in her duties by the pretty little four-year-old niece of the groom, Miss Ethel Villers Pearson, who was attired in white china silk, trimmed with point-degene lace. Isaac Squiers was the best man.

A few friends, after the ceremony, greeted the happy couple at the residence of the groom's parents. The couple left on the 9:20 train for New York, and as the carriage left the house they were greeted with showers of rice, old slippers and laughter. They were the recipients of a number of very handsome and valuable presents.

The groom is the son of the well-known citizen W. W. Pearson, and is employed at the Potter Press Works. On their return from their wedding tour they will make Plainfield their home. The wedding was a quiet affair owing to a recent death in the family of the bride.

Newell—Erdman.

In the South Second Street Presbyterian Church in Morristown yesterday afternoon took place the marriage of Miss Katharine Erdman to Rev. G. Kennedy Newell, pastor of Hope Chapel of this city. A large number of Plainfield people were in attendance at the happy event, many of them driving to Morristown. A stage-load of young people from Hope Chapel witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Newell will return to Plainfield early in June, after a bridal tour, at which time a reception will be tendered them.

IMPORTANT REAL-ESTATE CHANGE.

H. G. Runkle has purchased the White building at Front street and Park avenue, occupied on the first floor by the Plainfield Tea and Grocery Company, Leggett's drugstore, Collier's jewelry store, and Laing's hat-store.

It is understood that Mr. Runkle's intention is to remodel the building by removing the stairway to the Park avenue side, occupying Collier's place, and installing the City National Bank at the corner. The ground floor to be leveled even with the sidewalk.

Mr. Runkle confirmed the news of his purchase, when asked by The Daily Press today, but said that he could not state his plans because they were not yet completed.

Sewer Excavations Hurt Business.

West Front street merchants claim that the blockading of certain sections of that thoroughfare by the sewer work is injuring the volume of trade transacted for the time being.

C. Y. M. L. SUCCESS.

Excellent Entertainment Afforded by Plainfield Amateurs.

The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum of this city is a thoroughly active and wideawake organization, and all previous efforts towards success and fame have been most flattering. They have always endeavored to give the best in every undertaking, and the results reached have always been those for which they sought. And when the entertainment which was given last evening was arranged those acquainted with the affair in detail had not the slightest doubt as to its success. Strict attention was given to rehearsals, with the idea of excelling all former entertainments ever given, and the success which attended their first performance was indeed most gratifying.

In opening, the orchestra, under the able direction of Eugene O'Reilly, rendered a very pretty selection that received hearty approbation from all.

Messrs. Burns and Austin then appeared, and gave a realistic dialogue entitled "The Drummer's Specialty". It was amusing, and the audience appreciated the humor evidenced.

"A Dutchman's Tribulations" was the topic assigned John H. Carney, and those present were convinced that they had never seen a Dutchman in so much trouble before. Everyone was quick to catch the pith of the jokes that permeated his whole discourse. The humor of Plainfield's favorite flowed like the quiet stream in the brook until the ocean was reached, when it burst forth in a sea of hearty applause. The Dutchman finally reached the end of his troubles, and retired, leaving all in the best of spirits.

Miss Sarah Carney sang "Say Au Revoir, But not Good Bye". Her voice was excellent, and the selection was finely rendered. Miss St. Leger was the accompanist.

Part two was devoted to an exceedingly pretty comedy-drama in two acts, entitled "Hick'ry Farm". The story is one of quiet New England life, with amusing and exciting incidents, interspersed. The cast was superb and well trained. M. J. Cashin as Ezekiel Fortune, the New England farmer, was very clever, and the part could not have been improved on; while C. J. Ward as Lawrence M'Keegan, an alderman from the city, was in such contrast from the quiet life of Ezekiel that the audience had the opportunity of seeing both the city and country side interpreted in a manner that would have done credit to professionals. Miss E. Day was given the part of Jessie Fortune, daughter of Ezekiel. The programme styled her pretty and unsophisticated, and there was no mistake, for the part was filled with credit, and Miss Day received hearty commendation, as did also Miss A. Keely, who took the part of Mrs. Priscilla Dodge, a susceptible widow. The four parts mentioned are worthy of special note, but the rest of the cast was also excellent, and all deserve great credit for the very able manner in which they assumed their different roles.

Petty Thieving that Counts Up.

A few days ago sneak thieves broke into an isolated barn on Passaic Valley road, near Berkley Heights, in which David E. Townley, who resides on Manning avenue with B. S. Braider, has his household goods and farm implements stored. The thieves took the wheels from a buggy, and departed with them, leaving the body of the vehicle in the barn.

At different times the structure has been entered and various articles taken therefrom, aggregating $150.

Detective Kelly of Summit has been engaged to ferret out the guilty parties, and is now at work on the clues.

John H. Cuthbert of Cranford, formerly of Plainfield, expects to take an ocean voyage for the benefit of his health next week.

Mrs. E. G. Pease, who is ill at her mother's home in New York, has been given up by the physicians, congestion of the brain having set in.

HER INMOST MIND.

"When I was a young man," began Mr. Arkin, "I was an enthusiastic student of natural science; chemistry, physics, astronomy, zoology, botany, all came in for their share of attention. But the subject which interested me most of all was the anatomy and physiology of the human brain and nervous system. In my travels in the East I had seen a good deal of opium eating and smoking, the use of Indian hemp and other narcotics, and being thus led to study the action of drugs upon nervous tissue I discovered some things of which the scientists of the day know nothing, nor never will if they continue to work in their present superficial fashion.

"One day I received from a friend in Zanzibar a little package of roots which he said were used by the medicine men there, and were supposed to have wonderful properties. I made a decoction of some of them, and, after testing it to ascertain that it was not poisonous, I took a small dose.

"At the end of an hour I could perceive no effect, and had about concluded the thing was a 'fake' when the young man whom I employed to assist me in my experiments entered the room.

"'Well,' I understood him to say, 'I suppose the fool has been messing some more with his filthy roots.'

"'Sir,' I exclaimed, 'how dare you?'

"My assistant looked at me with astonished expression.

"'I didn't say anything, sir,' he replied, and then, though his lips were shut tight, I seemed to hear him add: 'Is he drunk or crazy?' I stood bewildered for a moment and then the truth flashed upon me—the drug had in some way rendered my brain responsive to the thought of another without the mediation of the senses.

"For several days I went about reading the thoughts in people's minds, and then the revelation of the general baseness of humanity became so terrible that I resolved never to touch the drug again." Mr. Arkin here paused.

"And did you never?" I asked, "find any exception, any true, noble soul, amid all the babble of base ones?"

"Never," he replied. "What was not evil was petty and trivial."

"Yes," said I, "such certainly do exist. I will be sworn that I know a person with a mind so pure you might search it with an intellectual microscope without finding one trace of anything ignoble, of anything but what is true, beautiful and good."

My friend gave me an understanding look and said, with a smile:

"Happy the man who can believe that. I envy him from the bottom of my heart."

"If you do not believe it," I replied, provoked, "then take some of your miserable drug and come with me. I will let you see for yourself."

"No," he said, "I vowed never to touch it again, and I never will, but if you would like to try—why I have no objection to lending you a little."

I signified my desire to do so, and he went to his room, returning presently with a little vial, half filled with a ruby liquid.

"Take three drops of that in a glass of water," he said, "about half an hour before you meet this person. But before I give it to you I want you to promise me two things—first, that if as I expect you find this person unworthy you will not in your despair do anything desperate; and, second, that you will return that vial and report the result of the experiment."

I readily acceded to these requests and we parted, he to take his afternoon nap and I to stroll on the beach.

After supper I went to my room, took the required dose and in half an hour sallied forth to find Miss Atwood. I made up my mind whatever occurred not to betray my new power, but I nearly broke my resolution the first person I met. This was one Binks, a fellow who had been in the habit of borrowing small sums of money. He greeted me with a smile and a "How d'ye do?" but he thought:

"Here comes that blooming jay, Brown. Wonder if he's good for another tenner?"

"No, sir," I said, drawing myself up and looking at him fiercely. "That blooming jay, Brown, is not good for another tenner nor for another cent."

His jaw dropped; he stared at me, and I left him under the impression that he had inadvertently spoken his thoughts aloud.

I found Miss Atwood sitting by herself in a cane backed settee on the veranda, looking out over the water. The last glow of the fading sunset gleamed over the tranquil sea. In its magic light Miss Atwood's face seemed to me of almost supernatural beauty, and I approached her with a feeling akin to awe.

This was quite dispelled, however, by her thinking as I came up: "Oh, good! here comes Charlie!"

"Good evening, Miss Atwood," said I.

"Good evening, Mr. Brown," she replied, moving over a little on the seat, "won't you sit down?"

I seated myself beside her, and pointing to the western sky, said:

"See what a beautiful fairyland nature has painted for us in yonder clouds. It looks to me like another and vaster ocean dotted with golden aisles, and on one of them is a palace all of ruby and opal. Would it not be lovely if we could live in such a mansion?"

"Oh, wouldn't it," she cried with that dreamy, poetic expression on her face which had so often charmed me. But to my utter astonishment, she was not thinking of the clouds at all, but was speculating as to whether my rather conspicuous watch chain was genuine or plated.

I thought with chagrin of the various other times I had uttered similar sentimental remarks, and wondered if they had all had the same reception. But I resolved not to judge too hastily and began again:

"The season here is fast drawing to a close, Miss Atwood," I said, "soon all our lazy dream life here will be broken up, and each must return to take his part in the busy life of the world."

"Yes," she said, "isn't it sad to think that the happy days are nearly over, that the friends who have met here and learned to love one another must separate, to be lost forever in the dreary rush of every day life?"

"But in our case there is an alternative," I replied. "If we only wish to, we can make our pleasant summer here but the stepping stone to a lifelong happiness."

"How do you mean?" asked she in an undertone, and looking down in feigned embarrassment. As a matter of fact, however, she wondered if it was getting dark enough so that she could let me kiss her, should I manifest any tendency in that direction. As may be imagined, I was not overpleased with the result of my experiment so far, but still, I reasoned, it was only natural that a lover should overestimate the intellectual qualities of the girl he loved, and as far as I could see she really cared for me, so I said, with perhaps a little less emotion than the occasion demanded, for a gambler who knows the dice are loaded can't work up much excitement:

"Miss Atwood, Lucy dear, you know that I love you." I spoke with greater certainty on this point than lovers are wont to do. "I have loved you since the first day we met in the park. Will you join your lot with mine, Lucy?" I leaned over and took her hand without waiting for an answer.

"Oh, this is so sudden, Mr. Brown," she replied, affecting great embarrassment, but leaving her hand in mine, "you must give me time to consider."

This hypocrisy irritated me.

"Oh, come," I said, "you have thought of this before; I know you have," and considering that it was dark enough, I put my arm over her shoulder, drew her to me and kissed her.

"No," I replied, "you can't get away until you've said 'yes.'"

"Well, then," she said in a mock plaintive voice, "if that's the case I must comply, you wicked man—'yes.'"

I prepared myself for the feeling of tender joy which was to diffuse itself through her mind at this happy consummation, but here is what she thought:

"Well, it's all settled now. I wish, though, it had been Willie; he has twice as much money."

Little she thought how fatal that was! Pushing her rudely from me I exclaimed angrily:

"Indeed! Would you like me to tell him of your regard?"

"Why, what's the matter?" she stammered. "Tell who—what?"

"Tell Willie, whoever he is, of your great affection for his money bags."

"I don't understand," said she, tremulously, which was true enough. Then the same thing occurred to her that did to Binks—she supposed that she had unconsciously spoken her thoughts aloud.

"What did I say?" she asked.

"Oh, you didn't say anything, confound it," I replied, "you only thought."

"How do you know what I thought?" she asked, in indignant astonishment.

"Oh, never mind," I replied. "Good-by." I rose and started to leave her, but she walked quickly up to me, took hold of my coat lapel and cried in a half whisper full of wrath:

"Sir, how dare you trifle with my affections this way?"

The mass of furious thoughts which raged in her mind at this moment was a revelation to me! It was worth all the pain of my discomfiture.

"Don't get excited," I said, soothingly; "excitement dilates the blood vessels of the face and spoils the complexion. As to that breach of promise suit you were just now thinking about, let me, from my legal knowledge, advise you not to try it; you haven't sufficient grounds."

She started back in terror.

"Can you read the inmost working of my heart?" she cried.

"Perhaps," I replied; "at any rate I can see into the cavity where the heart ought to be."

I left her and hurried to my room, giving a wide berth to every one I met on the way. I could not sleep, but sat up all night smoking and pondering over my strange experiment.

As soon as it began to get light I left my chamber and went out on the little balcony where we had been playing chess the day before. On the way I passed close by a servant, and was happy to find the effects of the drug had completely passed away. Whether he thought me an ass or was grateful for the various silver coins I had given him as fees remained as much a mystery to me as ever.

The air outside was still. The waves came in on the beach with the precision of clockwork, and reared, curled over and fell with a deep musical swishing sound, and the roseate hues of the dawn sparkled below in the dew laden lawns of the park.

A strange feeling came over me that all I saw and heard was a stupendous dream of which I was an insignificant part. I half expected to see the scene before me suddenly roll up like a theater curtain to disclose some more real world back of it.

Presently I was roused from my reverie by some one coming up behind me and turning I saw my friend Mr. Arkin.

"Well," he said, "what luck?"

I told him the result of the experiment and returned him the vial.

"Life is a failure," I said.

"No," he replied, "I don't think it is. When inquisitive people like you and I go to prying into secrets not intended for us, it is our own foolishness and not nature we have to blame for the result. The longer I live the more I become convinced that life is symbolical; that its worth lies not in what it is in itself but in what it signifies to us and that the man who expects more is as foolish as he who should tear a rent in a beautiful painting and then complain of the dingy wall behind it."—Exchange.

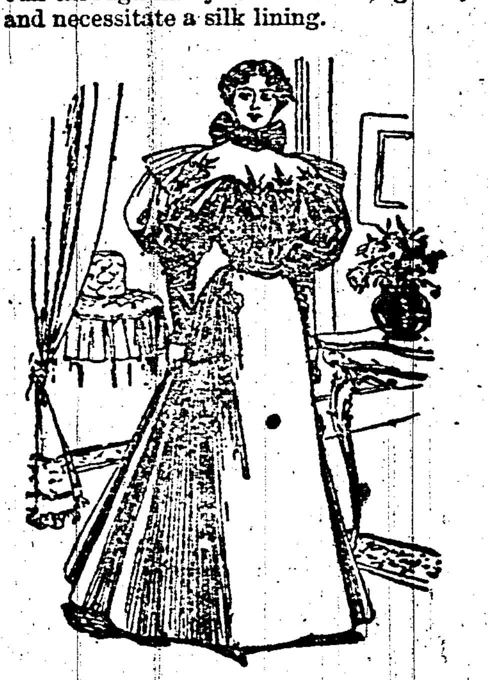
HER RULING PASSION

TWO PARIS DREAMS THAT CAN BE MODIFIED TO SUIT.

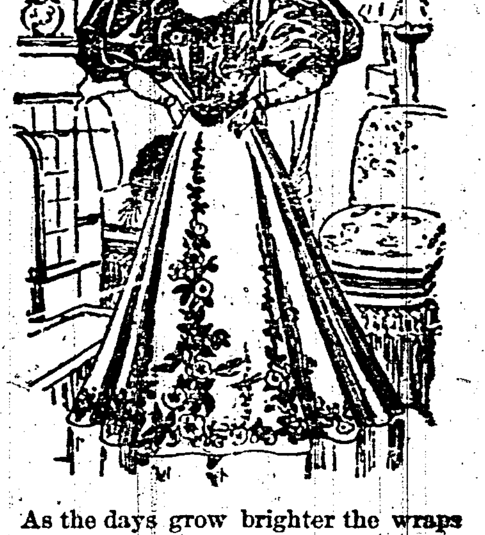
Summer Linens Are as Dainty as Chine and Crepon Effects Are Shown. Turkish Batiste is Something New. Summer Capes.

The dinner dress illustrated here is of lilac bengaline richly embroidered in silk, gold and jet. The visiting gown is of gros de Suez in a soft shade of pinkish gray. The pointed collar is made of rose pink silk embroidered with ruby beads and silk over a deep plisse of silk muslin in the shade of the gown.

The summer cottons and linens are very dainty and lovely, and carry out in colors and designs all the new features seen in the silks and wool. Some of the zephyrs have a distinct chine effect, and there are many cotton stuffs showing crepon waves or seersucker stripes. A very lovely material is a buff cotton with a creamy, crinkly stripe running through it. On the plain stripes are printed tiny Pompadour rosebuds. Most of the materials are decidedly fanciful and show combinations of color as well as a mixture of threads. Indeed, the combination of cotton and silk in the same goods is the most prominent novelty. The new ginghams have silk dots, or stripes, or small figures woven in them. Sometimes an all over lace design is woven on the surface in a silk of the same or another color. Lace stripes run through many of the cotton goods, and necessitate a silk lining.



There is a pretty fabric called Turkish batiste. It shows slightly tufted squares, giving it a faint resemblance to Turkish toweling. A great deal of black and white is still seen; so are the cool cornflower blue and the old fashioned buff and flower designs, particularly roses, are considered in very good style. These designs are partly stamped and partly embroidered. For example, a very pale yellow muslin has a large all over design of woodbine stamped on it in dull greens and golden browns, with the bright berries embroidered in red silk. A cool looking lawn has black polka dots embroidered on a white ground and is divided into squares by threads of pale yellow silk. Many of the lawns have cords running through them of cotton or silk, in the same or a different color. There are lovely crepes, some with the popular Oriental or Japanese designs printed on them. These make charming gowns when softened by a profusion of yellow lace.



As the days grow brighter the wraps grow smaller and gayer; still they all seem to retain the simplicity and the daintiness that have from the first characterized the spring modes for wraps. A cape that shows a novel feature in the use of ribbon is of black silk finished about the bottom by a ruche of the same. It has a short round yoke of an embroidery of jets and blue paillettes done on black net. Below the yoke the cape is covered by two accordeon plaits of black chiffon. At intervals there are straps of black satin ribbon fastened by buttons of blue paillettes. The collar is of the accordeon plaited chiffon, crushed in on each side by a large bow of ribbon. A light silk lace is accordeon plaited and very much used on these collars. It is newer and perhaps in better style now than the chiffon. A pretty cape of a fancy shot silk is trimmed with two rows of this lace. The upper row passes about the shoulders and is bunched up on the shoulder with some ribbon loops. This arrangement of the trimming would, in most cases, add to the becomingness of the garment. The cape has a turned over silk collar; and over this is the accordeon plaited lace, which is arranged with some ribbon, another bunch in the back.

Better than living a hundred years, not seeing the highest religion, is one day in the life of a man who sees the hightest religion.

An Unusual Style.

Barber—How will you have your hair cut, sir?

Mr. Gruff—In silence, if possible.

A Remedy Against Flies.

"I never use window screens," said a wise housekeeper the other day, "because I have a fancy that they shut out all the air in hot weather, and, besides, they serve to keep the flies in the house equally as well as out."

"But I never see a fly in your house," said her friend. "How do you manage it? For my part, I must confess that, screens or no screens, my summer means to me one long battle with the little pests."

"My remedy is a very simple one," said the good housekeeper, "and I learned it years ago from my grandmother, when I used to watch her putting bunches of lavender flowers around to keep the flies away. My method is simpler. I buy five cents worth of oil of lavendar at the drug store and mix it with the same quantity of water. Then I put it in a common glass atomizer and spray it around the rooms wherever flies are apt to congregate, especially in the dining room, where I sprinkle it plentifully over the table linen. The odor is especially disagreeable to flies, and they will never venture in its neighborhood, though to most people it has a peculiarly fresh and grateful smell."

Messages by Barbed Wire.

Webster City, Ia., is becoming honeycombed with telephones, and every town within a radius of fifty miles will soon be connected with Webster City. The scheme is something new and surprising even to old telephone men, but it works like a charm. An inventive genius there struck upon the idea of making direct connections with the barbed wire on the fences that run along the prairie. He tried a line first to Duncombe. It was a success, and now he has an incorporated company which has just sprung into existence and is getting rich. A line was hitched on to the barbed wire fence to Williams, twenty miles away, in one day, by two men who used only eight or ten rods of insulated wire under the road crossings that pass over the railroad. He is laying a line to Boone, forty miles away, and if the barbed wire fences hold out he will push on to Des Moines or Missouri.

The fault of others is easily perceived, but that of oneself is difficult to perceive. A man winnows his neighbor's faults like chaff, but his own faults he hides, as a cheat hides the false die from the gambler.

An evil deed is better left undone, for a man will repent of it afterward; a good deed is better done, for having done it one will not repent.

The Bayonne Budget:—"The Daily Press, an afternoon paper, has been supported by the Plainfield people for eight years. During that period the Press like the progressive people that read it, has also prospered. The other day it came out in an entirely new dress, on its birthday. It is a handsome paper and carefully edited. Plainfield, with a population of 12,000, has two daily papers. Bayonne, with 25,000 people has no daily. If the people of Bayonne took as much interest in their city as the Plainfield people there would be half a dozen daily papers in it.

A Favorite Dealer.

Hillside Cemetery, the handsome city of the dead, is constantly receiving beautiful monuments, both granite and marble; and L. L. Manning seems to be a favorite dealer with those erecting them. The latest additions are two handsome granite monuments in the plots of Griffen Brothers and L. E. Barkalew.

Lawyer Codington Wins Again.

Before the Court of Common Pleas in Elizabeth Saturday the application of Arthur Crane for a hotel license at New Providence was refused. Ex-Judge W. R. Codington of this city appeared for the law and order people who opposed the granting of the license.

Spouses Stayed at Home.

Messrs. Will and "Pid" Randolph of Maynard's tonsorial establishment, and Wm. Kline of Packer's furniture warerooms, took advantage of the low excursion rates, and are in Philadelphia sight-seeing. They were not accompanied by their wives.

Relic of the Battle.

'Clint' Shannon, of Woolston & Buckle's, secured a trophy at the circus grounds after the battle (?) between the police and the gamblers following the Wild West Show, on Monday last. He has varnished it and hung it up behind Manager Weaver's desk.

Chapot & Sons Will Stay Here.

The report that has been in circulation that Chapot & Sons had decided to locate their chamois finishing factory elsewhere than at Evona avenue, is pronounced false. The firm have paid for the land and will soon let the contracts for the erection of the necessary buildings.

Drowned, Not Kidnapped.

Reuben Savage, of Elizabeth, son of Reuben Savage, who disappeared Monday afternoon, was not kidnapped by a band of traveling musicians, but probably was drowned in Staten Island Sound.

VISITED AND INSPECTED.

Plainfield Firemen Visit Paterson and Newark Departments.

Chief Doane, Assistant Chief Martin, Driver Wm. Townley and Abner Bartlett of the Plainfield Fire Department, drove to Paterson Sunday by the way of Orange and were entertained by Chief Engineer Stagg, who gave them an exhibition of the chemical engine, the workings of which they were greatly pleased with. In fact they admired the whole department, which is a model in efficient service.

They returned by the way of Newark, where they called on Chief Kerstead Here they spent a half hour and were shown the new fire patrol house by Superintendent Meeker. It is perfect in its appointments.

There are dogs and dogs. Some dogs would save a man's life; other dogs would kill him if they got a chance. The Press is not informed that any man's life in Plainfield was ever saved by a dog; neither has it been recorded that any human being was ever saved from the grim-reaper by a Towser. Therefore it must be concluded that these two breeds of canines are foreign to this locality. But the snooping dog seems to be in evidence. Whether it is best to shoot the snooping cur or to build fences, and keep him from snooping—that is about your place at least—is a question. "Good Morals" says that if the cur nuisance is not abated, he will have to swear. Then "Aliquis" advises him to build fences for protection to his property and to his morals. Now The Press is in receipt of another communication on the subject from "Fencer", which is given below. The only regret The Press has with reference to the discussion is the point made that the fence is said to be advantageous in keeping dogs away, and, also, in keeping the women from gossiping, via.: the back yard. But the women are able to look out for themselves. "Fencer" says:

"I read 'Aliquis' effusion on the subject of dogs and fences with mild indignation that rose to a fever heat, when, a little later, two dogs broke through my fence and assailed two peaceable old hens who were staked out with their broods, and, after killing one of the chicks and tearing a majority of the feathers out of one of the old hens, were only put to flight through the medium of a soda water bottle, which, by a well-directed aim, struck one of the brutes amidships. Talk about fences! What fence avails keep out these lawless brutes when they desire to get in? Did any one ever succeed in keeping a pair of rabbits, except under lock and key, without some cur, blue-blooded or otherwise, destroying them sooner or later? How many poultry yards have been broken into and devastated by the same factor? The point made by 'Aliquis' is apparently this: 'It is my business to keep as many worthless dogs running loose as I please, and it is your business to protect yourself if you can'! The fact is, there is no protection in any fence, except an expensive one. A majority of our citizens rent their homes, usually with a small plot of ground, which it is a pleasure to cultivate, even on a tiny scale. Now should each tenant erect a fence to keep out his neighbors dogs? According to 'Aliquis' it would seem so, but it appears to me that the other side has the better argument. Let 'Aliquis' keep his dogs if he likes, but let him keep them at home, or send them out walking with a nurse the same as he would his children. Genuine dog-fanciers keep from ten to twenty dogs of all ages, and their neighbors never have cause for complaint. If 'Aliquis' should kill his dogs and cultivate a garden, how soon he would be on the other side of the fence. I had nearly forgotten 'Aliquis' reason, or one of them, as to why people do not have fences: He says it is to afford facilities to the women for slipping into each others kitchens to gossip. Du tel! I did have an idea that back yards and kithens were principally given over to the servants. Certainly the absence of a fence about premises should not be a guarantee that its female occupants are gossips. No, 'Aliquis,' the truth is you are one of those who want the earth with a fence around it. Dogs have their rights, but they are too often allowed more than their share, rather than less."

The Rockaway Record:—The Plainfield Daily Press came out on Friday in a neat and attractive new dress, which is of great credit to Bro. Force.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Lyman R. Allen, teacher of sciences in the High School rode to Paterson on his wheel Friday afternoon at which city he spent Saturday with friends.

Several of the High School cyclists have been riding about the surrounding country posting notices for the field day of the P. H. S. A. A. to be held on tee Crescent Oval, Saturday, June 8.

The Elizabeth Daily Journal says: Johnson of Rahway, George Cobb and Charlie Carpenter will ride at the Plainfield meet on Decoration Day afternoon. The two former are at Plainfield, training on the track.

The entries for the Irvington-Milburn road race, which will take place Memorial Day morning, numbers 137, 13 less than those of last year. They include the crack long distance riders of the country. The entries from the Crescent Wheelmen of this city are E. T. Hand and A. H. Barnett.

Answers to 100 letters sent to the bicycle firms throughout the United States by the Cosmopolitan Magazine show that there never was such a demand for wheels, and that all the factories are from 1,000 to 2,000 machines behind in their orders. In Plainfield this healthful excercise has been adopted by all the better class of people, and sales have been very large this season.

The New York Times of yesterday said: The publication of the big prize list for the opening meet of the National Circuit, under the auspices of the Crescent Wheelmen of Plainfield on May 30, has brought in an avalanche of entries for the various events. The popular track of the Crescent Wheelmen will be the objective point of many runs today. The club has expended a large sum upon the track this year, and it is now in fine condition. Many local fliers will train on it in preparation for the Memorial Day meet.

Details of what promises to be one of the largest century runs ever started from Newark were arranged Friday night. The start will be at 5 a. m. on July 6, and the route will be through Belleville, Passaic, Paterson, Montclair, Orange, Elizabeth, Westfield, Plainfield, New Brunswick, Matawan, Keyport, Red Bank, Little Silver and Long Branch to Asbury Park. The checking will be done by the number system, the checks being dropped in boxes at the several places designated. Plainfield and New Brunswick will be the dinner stops.

A Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism.

From the Groton Connecticut Review.—"David Lewis, who has been afflicted all winter by rheumatism, is out again and all due to one of the medicines advertised in our columns. After trying everything possible, he used Chamberlain's Pain Balm, which has relieved him of all pain, from which he was a constant sufferer and promises to make him fit for duty soon. We know David has been a great sufferer and are glad to see him around again." For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy.

Mr. D. Wiley, ex-postmaster, Black Breek, N. C., was so badly afflicted with rheumatism that he was only able to hobble around with canes, and even then it caused him great pain. After using Chamberlain's Pain Balm he was so much improved that he threw away his canes. He says this liniment did him more good than all other medicine and treatment put together. For sale at 50 cents per bottle at Reynolds's Pharmacy.

It Did the Business.

Mr. J. H. Cobb, publisher of the Mirror, at Brockton, N. Y., says: "For nearly two years the Mirror has been publishing the advertisements of Chamberlain's Remedies. A few days ago the writer was suffering from a bowel trouble and resorted to an old remedy which did not prove efficacious; finally he tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and two doses did the business, checking it completely. For sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy.

Agreeably Surprised.

"I had a very severe cold on my lungs that caused much soreness and gave me considerable uneasiness in regard to the result," says Mr. T. E. Smith, of Billerica, Mass. "A local druggist called my attention to Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and on his recommendation I gave the remedy a careful trial. The result surprised me; I recovered entirely in three days." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's Pharmacy.

WAS WAR FOR THE LORD.

Dr. Lewis's Interesting Memorial Day Sermon.

VETERANS AND FRIENDS TURN OUT.

He Says That War, With All Its Evils, Has Been a Great Civilizer, and Human Rights Have Found Their Progress Along the Pathway of Earth's Battlefields.

Winfield Scott Post, No 73, G. A. R., Major Anderson Post, No 109, G.A.R., Woman's Relief Corps, No 10, auxiliary to Winfield Scott Post and John Hand Camp, No 28, S. of V., to the number of about 150, marched in a body to the Seventh Day Baptist Church Sunday and listened to a patriotic sermon by the pastor, Dr. A. H. Lewis.

Every seat in the handsome edifice was taken. After the organization had taken their seats, a very fine rendition of "My Country 'Tis of Thee" was given with variations on the organ by Miss Jessie Utter. This was followed with a beautiful anthem by the choir. Rev. Dr. Livermore then read the scripture selection and offered prayer, after which Miss Kate Opdyke, of Somerville, sang a solo that was very much enjoyed. Around the pulpit Old Glory was draped artistically and an excellent picture of Abraham Lincoln hung in the centre with a beautiful arrangement of flowers entwined. Beneath was a large picture showing the martyred President and his staff.

Dr. Lewis spoke in part as follows:

Dr. Lewis's text was from Rev. 19:6: "Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." Theme: God the Supreme Arbiter in the Affairs of Nations. History is full of evidence that a power unseen and often wholly unappreciated at the time decides every great issue in which questions of right and righteousness are at at stake. Men plan and purpose—but sooner or late God decides by resistless decisions. In all this He is educating men and making the world better. War, with all its evils, has been a great civilizer, and human rights have found their progress toward recognition and triumph along the pathway of earth's battlefields. It has been thus, but our nation has now reached a point at which no more need or possibility of war ought to appear.

In the late war, as we can now see since the smoke of battle has cleared away, there were positive evidences of the overruling power of the Omnipotent Jehovah. For example: At the first, men said we will compromise and avoid war. We will not come to blows and bloodshed. God said: The evil is too great, the war must come. Then men said: We will save the Union and the Constitution, but we will not touch the real cause of the trouble—Slavery. God said: "You must let my people go." Then we said: We will settle the question of Slavery in some way by purchase, or by compromise. God said: It is too late to compromise, let my people go. To do all these things God chose the man for the hour and made him the "man of destiny,"—Abraham Lincoln. He inspired and guided him as Commander-in-Chief under God the Supreme Commander, to lead the Nation through the wearisome and bloody way to righteousness and justice, etc. Hence to victory.

Dr. Lewis here read various extracts from Lincoln's State papers, showing that the final issuing of the Emancipation Proclamation was the result of an agreement between God and Abraham Lincoln. Lincoln said: "I made a solemn vow before God that if General Lee should be driven back from Pennsylvania, I would crown the result by the declaration of freedom to the slaves." God kept his part of the contract, and gave you the victory at Gettysburg, that the world might see that He was leading his subordinates, your comrades, unto victory, and the Nation unto righteousness.

There are many new and vital problems again at hand, such as an honest ballot, just administration of governments in City, State and Nation; problems of economics, of immigration, of foreign interference, by direction or indirection, of separation of Church and State, etc. All of which God must settle, by guiding us, or they will never be settled rightly. And God will help us to settle them rightly, if we will listem to him.

In closing Dr. Lewis made an earnest and tender appeal to each veteran to believe that God guides individual men as He does Nations. That He waits to guard from temptation and evil, to strengthen in all right doing, and to lead to everlasting peace and salvation, all who will trust Him.

The service closed with the singing of "My Country 'Tis of Thee," after which Dr. Livermore pronounced the benediction.

FROM ACROSS THE WAY.

Many Items of Interest For the Boroughites.

ARRANGED FOR QUICK PERUSUAL.

A Cow That Was Looking for Ice Cream—St. Joseph's Children of Mary Portray All Nations—Nell Picket Goes Up for Another Sixty Days—Notes—Personals.

—Samuel Moore and Samuel Taynor were the two extra marshals on duty Saturday night.

—Carney Bros. are putting all the modern improvements into Dr. Zeglio's property, corner Somerset and Pearl streets.

—Francis J. Doremus of Prospect place, represented one of the Assembly Districts of Morris County in the Legislature of 1878.

—Horace Doty of Harmony street, formerly conductor on the street railway, who has been ill for the past week is recovering.

—Harvey A. Bird, born at Mount Bethel, Oct. 18, 1819, and now rounding out his 76 years, says: "Plant your lima beans; the new moon's arrived".

—D. N. Groendyke of Mercer avenue has parted with the horse that led him such a spirited chase up Somerset street one day last week. George Conover is now the owner of the frisky critter.

—Two fakirs sang "On the Sidewalks of New York" Saturday evening at 8 to a large and seemingly appreciative audience on Somerset opposite Emily street. They were peddling "All the latest songs of the day at five cents per copy."

—Newt. Smalley, W. F. Wiliams, (Barney) S. B. Wheeler, "Al" Smalley, and George Randolph will fish for pickerel in a private lake at Rockaway, Morris County, Decoration Day. The party will be the guests of Mr. Hoagland of Rockaway, who is the owner of the lake.

—Town Committeeman Elias Allen is preparing to put 100 tons of crushed stone on the East Valley road, commencing in front of the Blume property, continuing on towards Scotch Plains as far as the same will go. The roads in North Plainfield township are the best in Somerset County—of course, excepting the borough roads.

—A stranger who was driving fast through the streets of the borough Saturday night, was stopped by Marshal Samuel Moore and reprimanded. George Miller, thinking that the marshal was going to arrest the stranger, interfered so persistently that it was found necessary to arrest Miller. This morning Justice Crosley fined him $3, which he paid.

—Marshal Wilson found Nellie Pickett, who is well known among her class, in a disorderly condition Saturday night at a late hour. She had been out on a racket, and returning to her home on Grove street attempted to break up housekeeping. She was arrested much against her will, and this morning when brought before before Justice Crosley, words could not express her feelings. The Judge thought that 60 days would be sufficient, and she was given that time in which to recuperate.

—Levi P. Dupee has a cow that is a unique specimen of the hoof tribe. This producer of the lacteal fluid broke loose from the lot near Rockview avenue, where she was pastured yesterday, and meandered unobserved down towards the center of the city. The owner finally discovered her absence, and made a search for the bossy. She was found in the rear of Compton's ice cream parlors on West Front street, as if seeking for a dish of what the young swain spend so much money for in the Summer months. After some trouble she was driven back to where she belonged. Mr. Dupee says that if he had only known that she wanted ice cream he would have furnished her with it direct from his own house.

—The Children of Mary gave a reception in St. Joseph's Church last evening, the programme being an enjoyable one. The countries represented and those representing them were as follows: North America, Miss McCaffery; South America, Miss Kate Egany; Africa, Miss Nellie Bagley; Asia, Miss May Hughes; England, Miss Kate Kiely; Ireland, Miss Richardson. The introductory part was taken by Miss Blanche Brizard, and the maids of honor were Miss Anna Sheridan and Miss Alice Kennedy. Miss Kate Cooley did the crowning, assisted by Miss Annie McCullough and Miss Mamie Carney. A feature of the event was a bass solo, "Veni Creator", by James Bailey, assisted by the chorus, and Miss Tinnie Smith rendered a delightful soprano solo, entitled "Ave Verum". Following this Father Miller preached a very impressive sermon on the "Blessed Virgin".

A CHORAL JAMBOREE.

A Delightful Evening With the Singers.

FIFTY CENTS WAS THEIR PROFITS.

Charles W. McCutchen is the President for the Coming Year—Success of the Past Gives Great Hopes for the Future—Artistic Programme Rendered at the Finale.

The most successful season of the Choral Society since its organization came to a fitting end last Tuesday when the "jamboree", as it is called, was held in Vincent Chapel. It was largely attended by the members and their friends, and everyone declared it a delightful evening.

President Charles W. McCutchen introduced David E. Titsworth as "ring master" and under his guidance the entertainment was continued. Mr. Titsworth first announced a piano duet by Miss Jessie Utter, the accompanist and Edward J. Fitzhugh, the conductor, and remarked that "if he would conduct her to the piano she would accompany him". A march by Bohm was then rendered in a most artistic manner. Two selections "More and More" by Tosti and a "Lullaby" by Hughes were sung by George H. Simonds, baritone. Mr. Simonds, who is the New Jersey agent of the Home Life Insurance Company and a citizen of Newark, is the possessor of a very sweet voice and a richness of tone that quite delighted his hearers.

The Ladies Chorus of about forty-five next gave the cantata "The Lady of Shalott" by Bendell. Mr. Fitzhugh acted as conductor and the solo parts were sung by Miss Delphine Bowers, Mrs. Asa Collier and Mrs. Samuel Collins.

The rendering of this selection was most excellent, both on the part of the chorus and the soloists.

Lewis E. Bond next favored his fellow choralites with the tenor solo from the cantata "Rebekah" by Barnby. President McCutchen made a few remarks, speaking of the great success of the last year and the greater hopes for the future.

After another baritone solo by Mr. Simonds entitled "Anacreon, a Poet", by Arnold, a business session of the society was held. Mr. Howland was elected secretary, pro tem, as Nelson Runyon, the regular secretary, was detained at home as the result of a bicycle accident, and read the secretary's report. G. T. Rogers read his report as treasurer and showed that the society had paid all its debts and had 50 cents left.

The following officers were then elected for the coming year: President, Charles W. McCutchen; vice-president, David E. Titsworth; secretary, Nelson Runyon; treasurer, G. T. Rogers; librarian, N. Y. Hull; assistant librarian, S. R. Raynolds; directors, Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards, D. E. Davis, Dr. R. J. Shaw.

An amendment to the constitution providing for the appointment of an Advisory Board from the subscribing members was carried.

A vote of thanks was extended to the Ladies Chorus for the kind entertainment.

The meeting then adjourned and all united in spending a social hour together while a committee served ice-cream and cake.

The committee in charge of the refreshments consisted of Misses Runyon, Blair, Jackson, Sharp, Potter, Stevens, Woltman, Hasbrouck, Marsh, and Mrs. N. Y. Hull. They were assisted by a number of the young men in passing the good things.

After a very pleasant evening the Choral Society disbanded for the Summer.

Happy May.

Yesterday afternoon the eighth birthday of May Garrity of Arlington avenue was celebrated by her many little friends, who were Lilia and Gertrude Coddington, Julia Grisly, Kittie Conshee, Arthur Grisly, Etta Garrity, Willie Garrity, George Rittenhouse, Anna Cooper, Miss Evely Vardon, Mrs. Grisly, Mrs. Garrity, and Mrs. Conshee. Many presents were received. The party had a merry time playing games, after which cake, ice cream, and candy and lemonade were served.

Will Do a Big Business.

Titsworth & Company have secured the privilege of selling soft drinks, candy, cigars, etc., on the Crescent Oval at the bicycle meet. They will have two stands.

Festival For the Ball Team.

A strawberry and ice-cream festival will be conducted in the Y. M. C. A. Building Monday, June 10, commencing at 7. The proceeds will be used to meet the expenses of the baseball team.

LET GOOD MEN WEEP.

That is What Was Said When John Hand Died.

HIS FACE WAS TOWARDS THE FOE.

A Thrilling and Exciting Article From "The Plainfield Union" of 1861 That Will Interest the Boys in Blue and Every Other Patriotic Citizen—A Name That Lives in Memory.

The following article is taken from "The Plainfield Union", under date of Tuesday, Sept. 3, 1861, and is especially interesting at this time, as the Sons of Veterans, who have taken the name of John Hand, will hold special services over his grave at Scotch Plains, Thursday morning. He was a brother of Capt. William Hand of this city.

It reads as follows: "Let traitors rejoice and good men weep, for another patriot has fallen, with his face toward Heaven and his feet to the foe, and from the little band of noble men who went from among us to the field of battle, one has already been laid a bleeding sacrifice upon the altar of Liberty.

"John Hand, a name that will live long in the memory of our people, was one of those who went forth in our first quota to the war. Sundering all the ties of friendship, of social and domestic relations, he went out from among us to maintain the honor of our flag and defend our liberties; and yesterday he was brought back to his home cold in death, and clad in the simple uniform he had so honored. It appears that a party of about 40 men, of which Mr. Hand was one, was out on a scouting party, when they were attacked by a large rebel force, who attempted to surround and capture them. They retreated and were fired upon, and in this unfortunate skirmish two of them were killed, Mr. Hand of Plainfield, and Mr. Daily of Elizabeth. Mr. Hand's remains, in charge of an officer, were brought to his friends yesterday morning. As the news spread throughout the village that one of our company had fallen, a shadow seemed to settle down upon the place. Even the carriages seemed to glide along with a more subdued rumble, and everything gave evidence that some great sorrow had fallen upon our people. At noon the stores were all closed, business was suspended, flags hung at half-mast, and draped in mourning, and every token of respect was manifested toward the departed soldier. A sister had died on Saturday, the same day on which Mr. Hand was killed, and they were to be buried side by side. About one o'clock the procession moved, the soldier's hearse covered with the flag he had died in defending, and his coffin wrapped in its fold, while the young Zouaves formed his body-guard. A sadder procession, and perhaps a larger, never passed through our village. We counted 60 wagons, including the hearses, and many walked all the way to the Scotch Plains, where the funeral rites were performed. It spoke louder than words for the patriotism of our village, and was a fitting tribute to the patriotic dead.

"In the evening a large and enthusiastic meeting was held at the Methodist Church, to afford an opportunity for an expression of sympathy, and of patriotic determination. Excellent speaking was made by the Rev. Messrs. Luke, Atkinson, Bailey and Crandall, and also by Messrs. Runyon, Marsh, Orton and Hasbrouck. A more substantial evidence of sympathy in the shape of pecuniary aid, was proposed by Mr. Orton, and a collection was taken, but we have not learned the amount received. A series of resolutions were adopted by the meeting, expressive of their feeling. The meeting was every way a success. With no general notice of the meeting the church was well filled, and the enthusiasm more general and free than at any previous meeting."

A Sacred Agreement.

An agreement was made a number of years ago between John Benner of Fanwood and John Mannion of Bound Brook that in case of either of them dying, the survivor should decorate yearly the missing one's grave sometime near Decoration Day. Mr. Mannion died a few years ago, and Mr. Benner with a few friends has since fulfilled the pledge then made and Saturday, accompanied by Thomas Buckley, John Bowman, and Edward Thorn of this city, decorated the grave in the cemetery at New Brunswick where Mr. Mannion was interred.

Shows What a Pretty Place It Is.

The Hotel Netherwood has issued a very pretty little tintogravure pamphlet with handsome cuts of the exterior and interior views of the hotel, and a diagram of the rooms. The new proprietor has already booked a number of families for the Summer.

THE TALENT COMING.

The Bicycle Riders Gathering for Thursday's Event.

THE SPALDING TEAM ARE HERE.

And With Them are Some of the Celebrities of the Sporting World—Record Breakers Who Will Try to Break More Records at the Meet.

Never before has there been so many noted sporting people in Plainfield as there are today, all of whom have come to attend the National Circuit meet of the Crescent Wheelmen on Decoration Day. Tuesday morning a party of the racers arrived from Louisville, whose names are well-known to every wheelman in the country. They are: David Shafer, trainer and manager of the Spalding racing team; Pete McCue, his assistant; Walter C. Sanger, the "Big Un"; L. Duté Cabanne, the "Black Adonis"; Fred J. Titus, the "Marble Heart"; Conn Baker, the Hoffman team crack and Manager E. N. Humphres; F. Ed Spooner, "On the Spot"; Master Lee Richardson, the premier fancy bicycle rider of the world; W.C. Ingersoll, representing the National Cycle News Bureau of New York. Pictures of the Spalding team are published above. The following is a brief sketch of Master Lee Richardson:

In all the history of trick and fancy cycle riding, the game has never produced a better or more graceful exponent than Master Lee Richardson, who today holds the world's record for backward riding, both wheel and man traveling backwards. This is a feature of the performance that has never been attempted by any other rider, for even a short distance, while Master Lee rides half miles with as much grace and apparent enjoyment as do our cracks in the usual manner. Lee has been a rider for the past thirteen years, having mounted the smallest ordinary ever made, at the early age of three. His repertorie of tricks and forms of riding are extensive, enabling him to entertain the same audience for hours at a time. At Louisville on Saturday last he went against his own world's record of 2:32 2-5 for a half mile in backward motion, lowering it to the phenomenal time of 2:29.

Negotiations are now pending for Master Lee's appearance at the meet here on the 30th. If the arrangements are effected, Master Lee will go for a new world's record for a longer distance, and endeavor to lower his half-mile record.

CYCLING COMMENT.

The Rover Cycle Club of New York will have a run to this city July 7.

Charles Lister sold an Apollo wheel to H. Stewart of Cranford last night, and a Wynnewood to W. Western of North Plainfield.

W. J. Helfert of Utica, and Conn Baker of Columbus, O., are additional entries for the big cycle meet, Thursday, at the Crescent Oval.

The kranks will have an opportunity on Saturday to witness an exhibition of the National game. The Y. M. C. A. team will meet the Cranfords on Crescent Oval. An admission of 15 cents will be charged, to help pay the expenses of the team. All lovers of the game should assist the young men in furnishing good sport this Summer.

What is practically a revival of the old New Jersey Road Racing Association is the movement being fostered by the Metropolitan Association of Cycling Clubs. And all of the New Jersey Clubs within its membership have signified their approval of the scheme. The plan is for a series of road races between teams representing the clubs of the association. There are two plans, by the way, which have been proposed as the best means of determing the championship of the association. The first is when more than three clubs compete, the teams are divided into sections, and trial heats ridden. Then the winners of the several heats meet in a final race for the championship. The other plan is to have each club meet every other club once and the winner of the most victories to be declared the champion team. The committee having this matter in charge will soon hold a meeting and determine upon the association's action, and if it is decided to hold the races, the particulars will be arranged. The distance, it is understood, is to be ten miles.

Cut His Hand.

The little son of E. H. Dobbs of Netherwood, quite seriously cut his right hand with a piece of glass Saturday. Dr. Hedges dressed it.

TO KEEP PEOPLE SOBER.

Col. Hadley Explains a Temperance Movement.

WILL BE LOCALIZED TO PLAINFIELD.

The Object Is to Build Up and Strengthen the Church, Instead of Criticising and Weakening It—Politics and Denominationalism to Be Eliminated.

Sunday afternoon the audience at Reform Hall listened with close attention to an address from Col. Hadley, in which he described the new Christian Temperance Movement that has already become popular in many sections of the country. The technical or incorporate name of the society is The Christian Man's Union for Total Abstinence and Rescue Work. It was organized nearly two years ago with a National Committee in New York, whose headquarters are at 433 Lexington avenue, near the Grand Central depot. The officers are: John H. Huyler, president; Col. H. H. Hadley, vice-president and manager: A. E. Yates, secretary; George F. Langenbacher, treasurer. Among the members of the National Committee are: Rev. B. Fay Mills, the great evangelist; H. M. Moore of Boston, president of Moody's Seminary; C. N. Crittenton, the founder of the many rescue missions of his name; Samuel H. Hadley, superintendent of the Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission, New York; Col. Wm. Evans, Hon. John G. Wooley, C. H. Mead, Thomas Edward Murphy, Rev. S. Edward Young of Newark, and other noted workers, who feeling in this work the great need of an undenominational temperance work, neutral as to politics, formed this National Union which already has branches in many parts of the United States and Canada. It is claimed to be the only temperance movement on the platform of which all denominational and political preferences are buried.

According to Col. Hadley's description in order to be a member of any local Union the applicant must be a member of some evangelical church in the place, and to continue to be a member in good standing and must attend the meetings of their own church every Sunday and the prayer or class meetings once a week if possible.

The members further agree to help build up the churches to which they belong, and neither in public or private conversation criticise churches, church members, or those connected with any other religious or temperance movement. They are formed to represent in the community Christian, temperance and rescue work in connection therewith.

To this end each member agrees to try and seek and save at least one victim of drink each year, but before such recruit can become a full member of the Union he must unite with some church and be a regular attendant at its meetings.

The object of the Union thus being to strengthen and build up the church, instead of critcising and weakening it, and to that end the national committee in good faith invites the co-operation of the churches everywhere. At any meeting of the Union (local or National), any mention or attempt to discuss politics or denominationalism is equivalent to a resignation by the speaker, and he may be called to order as no longer a member.

The majority of the officers and members of a local Union must be men, and every member agrees to do individual rescue work, endeavoring to pay special attention to one drinking person by trying to bring him or her to the meetings of the Union; and through the Union, if he is worthy and sincere, into the church of his choice. It is hoped by the friends of the movement to inaugurate aggressive branches all over the country. During the past year seven of the local Unions which were formed throughout the country, have become successful rescue missions. It is a movement of the laymen for the non-churchgoers.

MISS RENARD SICK.

The Howard Stock Company Closes the Season Here.

John A. Preston's Howard Stock Company closed its season temporarily Saturday evening, owing to the illness of Miss Renard, the leading lady, who was stricken down with malarial fever on Thursday. Miss Renard is now at the Hotel Grenada in a precarious condition. The physician in charge states that the fever was contracted in the dressing rooms of Music Hall. President Rockfellow of the Board of Health made an examination of the sanitary arrangements of the Hall this morning. The company had six weeks more to run, and was to appear in Trenton tonight.

SKIN GRAFTING A FAD

There is a little boy in Montclair, N. J., who had such a jolly Fourth of July celebration last year that he hasn't got over it yet. He nearly burned himself up with firecrackers and the wounds wouldn't heal.

The only thing the doctors could do for the little boy was to try skin grafting—that is, picking out nice, clean, fresh little bits of skin from people's arms and getting it to grow on the sore places. And ever since last Fourth of July the doctors have been doing this. It seems wonderful to relate that they have skin grafted no less than 11,000 little pieces of skin on him, and it will take 5,000 more to entirely heal the burns.

This little boy's name is Freddy Griffith, and he lives at No. 87 Forest street. His father, Mahlon Griffith, isn't a rich man. Freddy is twelve years old.

Like a good little, patriotic boy, he spent the glorious Fourth last year setting off fireworks, but he saved his choicest stock for evening. This consisted of a pocketful of red, white and blue cartridges which he intended to fire from a toy pistol. How it happened he has never been able to tell to this day, but about 9 o'clock that evening he put his left hand into his trousers pocket, when suddenly there was a tremendous explosion. All of the cartridges had exploded in his pocket at once.

His friends think that he must have forgotten a piece of lighted punk with which he had been setting off firecrackers and dropped it in among the cartridges. At any rate, the various explosives set fire to his clothing and he was terribly burned about the lower portion of the abdomen and body. His limbs were burned from the groin down to the knees. He was also severely burned about the thighs. The flesh was burned completely off the left hand and wrist. At first it was thought that the unfortunate little fellow could not possibly recover.

The first operation was performed in August last, and the Griffith home was besieged with men and women, boys and girls, of all ranks and conditions of life, anxious and eager to be operated upon for the benefit of the little sufferer. At that time Fred was not able to be out of bed. He lay with supports under his body in such a position as to keep the injured parts from coming in contact with anything that might irritate the burns.

The volunteers first bare their arms. Dr. Halsey then gives the arms an antiseptic wash, in order that every particle of dirt may be removed. It would not do for even an infinitesimal particle of foreign matter to remain on the graft when it is applied to the boy's wounds. This shows how exacting nature is. Then the doctor shaves the surface of the arm that he is going to operate on. By this means the cuticle is brought to its virgin whiteness and loses even its growth of tiny hairs. Then the operator takes a small pair of pincers, so delicate that the points can scarcely be distinguished with the naked eye, and with a quick motion raises a piece of skin. This he nips off with a pair of scissors.

As fast as he gets the grafts he throws them into a glass dish containing diluted salt and water, which serves to cleanse them and keep the vitality in them. The grafts range in size from one thirty-second of an inch in length and breadth to one-half an inch, but very few pieces as large as the latter have been cut.

While Dr. Halsey procures the grafts Dr. Case puts them on the boy's wound. The cuticle that has been grafted upon the boy has been taken from over two hundred persons. It became a very proper fad among the young society people in Montclair to contribute skin for the cure, and swell young women vied with swell young men in proffering their fair arms to be operated upon. It also speaks well for the health and vitality of the residents of Montclair that the physicians never found it necessary to refuse any volunteer on account of ill health, bad blood or anything else.

The skin grafting symposiums took place every Sunday and every Thursday. Now that the cure is so nearly completed the doctors only work on Sunday. Fred is now able to sit up in an invalid's chair, and during the operation is not under the influence of anaesthetics. When asked by a reporter if he will play with fireworks again, he said: "You just bet I will! What would Fourth of July be without fireworks? But," he added, "I'll be more careful next time."—N. Y. The Uncertain Public.

"There seems to be a limit to the power of kings after all," said Emperor William, morosely. "I don't like to acknowledge that I'm vanquished, but I'm very much afraid I'll have to."

"What is the matter, your highness?"

"I'm a little bit disappointed, that's all. The Napoleon revival and the Trilby craze both prosper beautifully, but my Aegir fad doesn't seem to get along worth shucks."—Washington Star.

A doctor has discovered the curious fact that the skull of a man who has died from delirium tremens contains an alcoholic gas. A small opening in the skull soon after death permits this gas to escape, and it can be ignited, and burns with a bluish flame.

His Views.

"What are your views on the higher criticism, Doctor?" asked the inquisitive passenger.

"I am not a doctor," replied the ministerial looking passenger, "I am an actor. But as regards the higher criticism, I fully believe in it. The gang in the gallery knows more about a play than anybody else."—Indianapolis Journal.

FORESTS TURNED TO STONE.

An Insight to the Mighty Operations of Nature Which Produced It.

The Yellowstone National Park is called the Wonderland of America, and since the destruction of the New Zealand geyser area, it is, perhaps, entitled to be called the wonderland of the world, for within its limits the most varied of nature's workings may be observed. Its hundreds of hot springs and geysers, its precipitous canons and rushing cataracts, its snow capped mountain peaks and mirrored lakes, making it of surpassing interest. The lover of natural scenery may linger long over its beauties and its wonders.

From the geological point of view it is also of great interest, for here may be found rocks that range in age from the most ancient of which we have any knowledge to those in process of formation at the present moment. The superheated waters of the hot springs and geysers hold a large amount of rock making material in solution, which is deposited about the openings of the springs on the cooling of the waters, and in this way building up a mass of great magnitude.

These springs and geysers are constantly breaking out in new places, often on the borders or in the forests of living trees. The trees are killed at once by the hot water, and on becoming withered and dry, begin soon to take up the rock making solution by which they are bathed, and thus to pass into the fossil state.

Conditions similar to these, or at least favorable to the preservation of fossil forests, appear to have existed from a remote time, for there is evidence to show that the fossil forests were preserved before the most active of the hot spring phenomena were inaugurated. These fossil forests are located in the northeastern corner of the Yellowstone National Park, at a place known locally as Amethyst Mountain or Fossil Forest Ridge.

This is really a mountain some ten miles long and rising nearly or quite 2,000 feet above the level of the valley. If it were possible to cut a section down through this mountain, as a slice is cut from a loaf of bread, there would be found a succession of at least fifteen fossil forests one above another. That is to say at some remote day, geologically speaking, there grew a great forest which was covered up by the ejected material from a great volcano, rivaling in size Mount Etna, that is known to have existed some miles to the north. The trees were entombed in an upright position, and under the action of silica charged waters were fossilized. The action of the volcano ceased and quiet was restored for a sufficient length of time for a second forest to be developed above the first. Then came a second outburst from the volcano, and this forest was buried and fossilized like the first, and so in turn have the dozen or more forests flourished and been engulfed.

MRS. CLEVELAND'S GOODNESS.

Mrs. Cleveland is very kind to all her old classmates at Wells College, but she is more than kind to those of the number who are obliged to support themselves. At the Pure Food Exposition in Washington last fall a classmate gave lessons in cooking. She was a guest during the ten days of the exposition at Woodley, the President's country place.

"The President's carriage," writes the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, "brought her to her duties every morning and carried her out again after the close of the exhibition at 11 o'clock p. m.

"Mrs. Cleveland was a regular attendant on the classes, which, of course, made them fashionable. The cooking room was decorated with flowers from the White House conservatory every morning, and nothing was left undone by the President's wife to promote the success of her classmate."

Miss Catherine Willard, the niece of the apostle of temperance, Miss Frances Willard, was a roommate of Mrs. Cleveland at Wells College. She has a remarkable contralto voice and supports herself by singing. While she was visiting Mrs. Cleveland circulars were sent from the White House to the society people announcing that Miss Willard would give three concerts at the residence of Secretary Lamont under the patronage of the President's wife, to which season tickets of admission would be furnished applicants upon the receipt of $10.

For several days after the sending out of the circulars carriages filled with fashionable women rolled up to the entrance of the President's house. A large audience greeted Miss Willard at her concerts.

Sublime Self-Sacrifice.

"You look pale," said the sharp nosed girl.

"I feel pale," sighed the fluffy girl. "But I am happy, anyway. You know that stingy little Chollie Tapetie? Well, he did open his heart enough to take me to the food show, and, of course, I sampled the samples. What are samples for? And after I had eaten this and drunk that and the other till I just couldn't stand any more we started home. Then he thought he saw his chance. So he asked me to have some ice-cream."

"And did you accept?" asked the sharp nosed girl.

"Accept? I ate three plates. With cake. And lemonade.

Discriminating Wisdom.

A correspondent thinks he has discovered a discrepancy in the Bible because one verse says, "Answer a fool according to his folly lest he be wise in his own conceit," while another verse says, "Answer not a fool according to his folly lest thou also be like unto him." Solomon probably had in view the fact that there are two kinds of fools, each kind requiring different treatment.—Albany Times-Union.

TALENTED SCHOLARS.

Miss Jackson's Pupils Display Perfect Training.

A BRILLIANT AUDIENCE PRESENT.

The Students in Physical Culture and Rendering Give a Delightful Entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, Which Is Received With the Utmost Favor By the Large Assemblage of Guests.

That Plainfield has her full share of talented young women was abundantly shown Thursday at the recital of Miss Addie Parker Jackson's classes in physical culture and rendering held in the pretty little hall in the Y.M.C.A. building. The hall was crowded to its fullest capacity with an interested audience who manifested their appreciation by hearty applause and offerings of flowers to nearly every participant.

The graceful motions of the young women in their light blue costumes formed a rare and beautiful sight, and during their occupancy of the stage it presented a veritable symphony in blue, while Miss Hasbrouck's delicate accompaniment added greatly to the pleasing effect.

After the vigorous applause had died away Miss Mary A. Luckey gave the recitation "Brier Rose", and charmingly told the story of the girl who, though scorned by all, at last saved the lives of her townspeople at the expense of her own. Miss Luckey kept the attention of her listeners constantly, and her tender pathos brought tears to the eyes of many.

"The Raggedy Man" was next given by Miss Edna Smith, whose simple and blithe way took the audience by storm.

That touching little selection "The Clown's Baby", was rendered by Miss Lucy Pound in a most admirable manner. Miss Elizabeth Fish, in "The Jealous Wife" displayed her talent to its best advantage. The mixture of jealousy and trust, of honor and love, was finely portrayed, while her imitation of the French chemist seemed perfect.

A short sketch, "A Sisterly Scheme", was Miss Mary S. Hull's share on the programme, and greatly was it enjoyed by all; the love-sick young man, the would-be flirt, and the anxious sister were all strikingly realistic, and showed the result of Miss Jackson's careful training.

The second part of the programme opened with the recitation "Old Ace" by Miss Grace E. Overton, and splendidly did she render it, putting her soul into the spirit of the piece. Her hearers listened excitedly to her description of the race, so real did it seem, and when she finished they felt like cheering for the other Grace, the heroine of the poem also, while the continued applause demonstrated their thorough appreciation of it.

Dainty little Miss Amy Emmons in "Little Gustava" also displayed the great advantage of Miss Jackson's system.

Miss Marie L. Newman in "Mammy's Lil' Baby Boy" gave a most difficult recitation in an apparently easy manner, assuming the role of the colored "mammy" without trouble and in a very pleasing manner.

"Little Christel", the story of the child and king, was charmingly told by Miss May Pamalee.

Miss Katherine Dwight captured the hearts of the audience in her rendering of "The Marriage of the Flowers"; while her graceful motions and sweet voice made her seem sweeter than any of the flowers of which she told.

Master Clarence Mills as "Jerry" delighted and amused all by his newsboy language and manners, and displayed his courage and gallantry in a most natural manner.

A one-act farce, "Six Cups of Chocolate," ended the evening's pleasure. The dramatis personæ was:

Miss Adeline von Linden, German Girl. Miss Overton
Miss Marion Lee, Southern girl. Miss Hull
Miss Dorothy Green, New Englander. Miss Luckey
Miss Hester Beacon, Bostonian. Miss Pound
Miss Beatrix von Kortlandt, New Yorker. Miss Newman
Miss Jeannette Durand, French girl. Miss Fish

The scene was laid in the parlor of Miss Adeline von Linden, and here Miss Overton had a chance to display her talent in another direction. Her representation of the love-sick girl showed her an amateur actor of no mean ability. The plot was a simple one. Miss von Linden is to entertain five friends and while waiting for them reads a letter she has just received from an apparently smitten Princeton College student. Her friends arrive and after the usual quarrels all declare they are in love and all say that they have received letters. Miss Durand then reads her letter and the others soon realize that all are the same and their passionate lovers are the same man. Here the ability of the actors was shown plainly in their manner of receiving the sad news. Miss Luckey stamps her foot and declares she will be even with him. Miss Hull is pensively sad, while Miss Overton is apparently overcome at the sudden revelation. Miss Luckey's suggestions are listened to and a letter is written to the deceiving young man, signed by all, and just as it is finished and the necessary postscript added, the student is seen from the window and the girls make a hurried retreat to deliver it.

The parts were all taken in a manner that left nothing to be desired. Miss Fish appeared in her element as the French girl and Miss Newman sailed about like a perfect New Yorker. Miss Pound, the Bostonian, was quiet and dignified, as became her character, but her neighbor, Miss Luckey, the New England girl, was energetic as could be required. The pensive Southern girl, Miss Hull, and the bright but emotional German girl, Miss Overton, did all that could be wished.

After heartily applauding the work of the young women, the large audience slowly made their way out.

Charles Steiner acted as doorkeeper. The ushers were: Raymond A. McGee, John W. Kickner, Charles B. Morse, Charles Noble and Lambert H. Fish.

Too much cannot be said in praise of Miss Jackson by whom the entire programme was arranged and carried out, and Plainfield should be congratulated on possessing a young woman of such rare ability and energy.

ASCENSION SERVICES.

Sir Knights Templar Attend Grace P. E. Church.

Trinity Commandery, Knights Templar, and their visiting brethern from St. John's Commandery of Elizabeth, made a spectacular sight last night with their dark uniforms, set off with gold braid and glistening swords, together with the white plumed hats, as they marched through the streets from the station to the asylum and from there to Grace P. E. Church and return. The occasion was the celebration of Ascension Day by both the Knights and the church.

The members of Trinity Commandery congregated at the asylum in the Babcock Building at 7, and after donning their regalia, went to the North avenue station, preceded by Guttman's Band, where they welcomed 21 Elizabeth Knights.

At the church very impressive services were held. The surpliced choir, Rev. E. M. Rodman and the visiting clergyman met them at the entrance and escorted them down through the centre aisle to front seats, the choir singing "Onward Christian Soldiers."

After the opening religious exercises, Rev. Dr. Stockton of Orange, who is a Sir Knight, addressed them. His remarks were profound and interesting.

Mr. Stockton said that the occasion of the celebration of Ascension Day was one memorial in every thought of life, and that the history of the great organization which the Knights Templar represented was closely linked with the day commemorated for the crucifixion of Christ. He claimed for Masonry a permanent place in the sphere of Christian efforts, because they, with the church, had existed because of bowing to drink from the fountain of life with the testimony of the cross before them.

After the services the Knights were escorted back to their asylum, where they sat down to a sumptuous banquet. Remarks of a light and humorous character were made by Revs. Rodman and Stockton, and also by Eminent Commander Sir Knight Yates of St. John's Commandery.

Alexander Prentiss's Condition.

Wm. N. Pangborn has received a letter from Medical Director John U. Mair of the New Jersey State Hospital at Trenton, in which he says that the condition of Alexander Prentiss of North Plainfield, who was admitted to the institution a year ago, remains unchanged. He says he has but little strength of mind or memory, and is at all times quiet and orderly.

Sewer Work.

Honan & Sons are making excellent progress and doing good work with their sewer contract, with the exception of a delay in organizing their back filling and clearing up gang. They are waiting for some horses from Pennsylvania, and may be necessary to hold them back on their work until they clear up what they have started.

Sewer Work Said to Cause Sickness.

There has been considerable illness among the children of the city recently, which doctors attribute to the sewer excavations, and in consequence several families are planning to take their children to the seashore earlier than in previous seasons.

OLD GLORY PRESENTED.

A Gift to North Plainfield School.

PATRIOTIC EVENT THIS MORNING.

Somerset Council, No. 109, J. O. U. A. M., the Donors—Rev. Mr. Randolph Made the Presentation—Received by President McCutchen—Programme Carried Out by the Pupils.

The presentation of a flag by Somerset Council, No. 104, J. O. U. A. M., to the North Plainfield Board of Education to place Friday morning in the public school building.

A delegation consisting of Chairman Walter Walker, Dr. George Bedford, Frank Howland, E. GaNun and G. Mettler, from the Council were present. They were accompanied by Rev. Herbert Randolph, who made the presentation. He was introduced by Chairman Walker. Mr. Randolph made an exceedingly patriotic address that enthused the hearts of all present. He talked Americanism and said that those who had been born in this country should be proud of the fact. He had no condemnation for the foreigner who would come here and be a law abiding citizen, but when they seek to sap our very life-blood, it was time to call a halt. The boys and girls ought to be taught to develop a spirit of Nationalism. Mr. Randolph then presented the flag on behalf of Somerset Council. S. St. John McCutcheon, president of the Board of Education, accepted it in few well-chosen words, thanking the donors for the beautiful gift. He said we are one nation, and covered by one flag, that flag alone should cover our school house. We are glad to see the interest manifested by our citizens. On behalf of the citizens of our Borough and the Board of Education I thank you for this beautiful gift.

An excellent programme of music and recitations followed the presentation.

A BROKEN SHOULDER.

A. G. Voegler Sustains Serious Injuries in a Runaway.

August G. Vogeler, proprietor of the Union Meat Market on West Front street, met with a serious accident yesterday that will keep him closely confined for some time. With one of his employes he drove to Dunellen to purchase a lot of chickens.

When he reached his destination he drove into the yard, and in attempting to turn around, the turn was made too short. The wagon was upset, and this frighted the horse, causing him to run away.

Mr. Vogeler was thrown out of the wagon against a tree. His man was also thrown out but not injured. The latter with help succeeded in capturing the horse, and as the wagon was not damaged, he was able to bring Mr. Vogeler home.

Dr. Probasco was sent for, and learned that the collar-bone was broken, but was not able to ascertain whether there were any internal injuries. An examination will be made today by Dr. Probasco.

To Investigate Sewage Beds.

The City Councilmen who had arranged to go to Brockton and South Framingham Tuesday, but were detained on account of the weather, will probably make the trip Monday or Tuesday of next week.

An ambitious newspaper correspondent of South Framingham sent an article to the press association yesterday describing the trip of the above officials and told how Chairman Goodell of the Sewer Commissioners conducted them around.

BOROUGH GOSSIP.

The Council Marshal Committee Have an Important Meeting.

From The Press of May 24.

—Mayor Hegeman with the members of the Marshal Committee, Councilmen Lounsbury, Peck and Valiant, together with Borough Counsel C. A. Reed, held a private session last evening in the Borough Council rooms. There were present Judge Crosley, Marshals Van Horn, Lines, and Doud, with Specials Hansen and Goodman. The officers all being new ones, except Officer Lines, Borough Counsel Reed told them their duties, and informed them that they had no right to arrest anyone outside the borough limits, without a properly approved warrant. New rules will be drawn up by the committee, and all visitors will hereafter be refused admittance to the station house late at night. Special Marshal Taynor, who appeared before the committee to be sworn in, said he would not go on duty for only an hour or two Saturday nights, was informed by Mayor Hegeman that the committee was not there to be dictated to. Mr. Taynor left the rooms, and later in the evening the committee concluded to put him on duty Saturday evenings from 8 to 1, and he was then sworn in. The officers were there for an hour, and the committee remained in session for some time after their departure. New badges and a few additional night sticks were ordered for the officers. Dr. Cooley came in about 9 and remained until the close of the meeting.

—James E. Baily of Jackson avenue is under the care of Dr. Hedges.

—Ex-Surrogate Wm. Long of Somerset County was a visitor here yesterday.

—Fishermen linger daily alongside the banks of Tier's lake fishing for carp that do not bite.

—Many parties are to be seen returning from the woods and hillsides laden with wild flowers.

—Postmaster Bornman of Warrenville reports that the berry crop will be a large one the coming season.

—Isaiah Coriell, the retired Coontown farmer, is taking life easy in his new home on Grandview avenue.

—A party of local sports will enjoy a French dinner at Pedeflou's Hotel in the Valley some evening next week.

—The law is not changed in regard to the time to catch black bass. It is still unlawful to take them until May 30.

—A fair will be held on the lawn, corner of Craig place and Duer street, for the benefit of the Fresh Air Fund, June 21.

—J. Worth Coddington of the Plainfield Cold Storage and Ice Company has an attack of lumbago which he is very desirous of shedding.

—The cemetery on Chatham street is being trimmed and put in order by owners of plots. The grass in some places needs cutting badly.

—On top of the mountain just off Johnston Drive, where the Willis' live, you can see out as far as Sandy Hook, if your eyesight is good.

—Friends of Job Coddington, who is cultivating a truck farm on the outskirts of Somerville, will be sorry to learn that he is ill, but not dangerously so.

—A resident in perambulating through the picturesque Washington Valley yesterday was impressed with the lovely view there presented by Nature. The cattle browsing on either hillside and the sturdy activity of the farmers is a scene once encountered never to be forgotten.

A Serious Hurt.

John Beatty, an employe of Levi Bird, was severely injured yesterday while carting logs. He was lifting them from a wagon when one of them fell on his leg. It is feared that the limb is fractured. Dr. D. C. Adams is in attendance.

T. A. B. ANNIVERSARY.

The Society Has Been Doing Good for Twenty-three Years.

The Total Abstinence Benevolent Society of St. Mary's R. C. Church celebrated its twenty-third anniversary last Friday in their hall on West Fourth street. It was expected that Rev. Father Morris, who was the founder of the society would be present and make the address of the evening, but he sent word that owing to important matters he would be unable to come.

A financial statement for the last three years was read by the president of the society showing it to be in a healthy and flourishing condition.

Rev. Father Murphy was present and took the place of Rev. Father Morris. He gave those present an excellent talk and the members received much encouragement by his helpful words. The society has 48 members and the officers are:

President—P. J. Reville; Vice-president—John Hickey; Corresponding-secretary—P. J. Mack; Treasurer—D. J. Keefe; Financial-secretary—Charles McCarthy.

The committee who arranged last night's affair, and the women who assisted, are as follows: Morris Higgins, chairman; Patrick McDonough, Patrick Carty, Patrick Reville, Dennis Keefe, John Hickey, Misses Anna Higgins, Mamie McCue, Maggie Hickey, Nellie Hickey, Katy McDonough.

Dancing was a feature of the evening for which Eugene O'Reilly furnished the music. An excellent collation was served during the festivities.

FORWARD, MARCH!

Mt. Olive Women Can Carry Guns and Are Ready to Fight.

The Woman's State and Local Missionary Society of the Mt. Olive Baptist Church gave a musical and literary entertainment and military drill in Central Hall last evening, which was a great success.

The attendance was very large, and everyone had a glorious time. Select readings and recitations were given by Miss Harriet Jackson, Miss Mary Hueless, Miss Bettie Brown, and a vocal solo by Frank Brown.

Then came the military drill under command of Nelson Batts. There were 18 soldiers in line, all women, carrying small guns, and the way in which they executed the many difficult movements would have made a National Guard soldier envious. The drill was arranged by Mrs. P. H. Brown, president of the society, and who has lately moved here from Pittsburg, where she had charge of 500 women in a similar work.

She described the drill in a most effective manner and said she thought it was about time that women were learning to handle a gun, as men had been to war once and if called again they probably would shirk from duty. She thought the women of the nineteenth century should be up and doing. The following committee had charge of the affair: Mrs. P. H. Brown, chairman; Mrs. Martha Rogers, Mrs. Clara Johnson, Miss Fanny Scott, Miss Lulu Scott and Miss Jeanie Pembleton.

A large sum of money was realized and the society are congratulating themselves on their success socially and financially.

WATSON'S APPEAL DISMISSED.

The City's Motion Granted on Technical Grounds.

The Common Pleas Court yesterday at Elizabeth granted the motion of Corporation Counsel Marsh to dismiss the appeal taken by Michael Watson from his last conviction for illegal liquor selling. Watson's sentence was one hundred dollars fine and fifty-nine days in jail. He took an appeal but neglected to pay the County Clerk's fees on filing the papers until the day the case was moved for trial. The City claimed that the appeal had never been perfected and it was then too late to perfect it. The Court heard argument of respective counsel several weeks ago and has just decided in favor of the City as above stated. The City may consent to have a trial on the merits on the ground that Watson's neglect was due to unavoidable illness.

Death of John W. Hunter.

The many friends of John W. Hunter in Plainfield and Scotch Plains will be grieved to hear of his death, which occurred in Brooklyn, Tuesday last. He was a victim of consumption. He was a son of Edgar W. and Lydia A. Hunter, former residents of Scotch Plains, and was born in Catskill, N. Y. His funeral was largely attended, and the floral offerings were exceedingly beautiful and appropriate.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Imperial Dignity Conferred on the Man of Ajaccio.

PIUS VII PRESENTS THE CROWN.

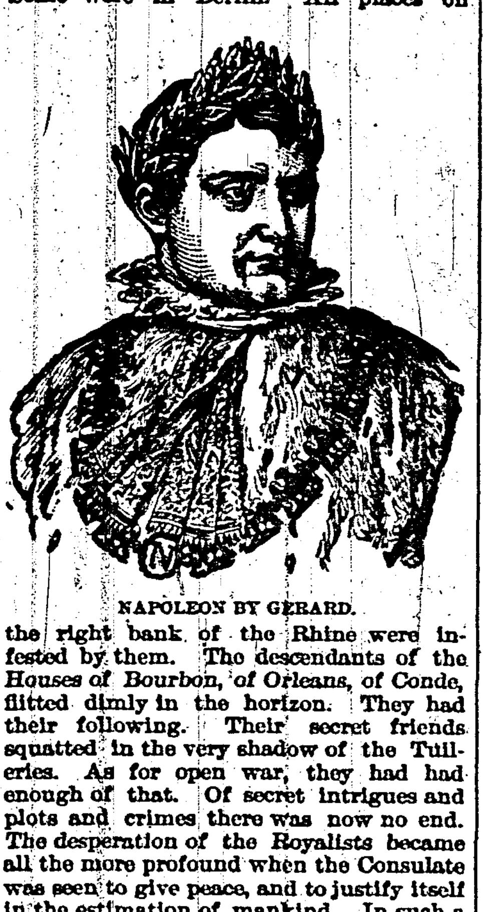
No Ruler of Mankind Ever Confirmed by Such Acclaim—Plots Against His Life. Pichegru, Georges Cadoudal and the Duke of Enghien Put to Death.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XV.—SERA-T-IL EMPEREUR DES FRANCAIS?

To the ancient order in Europe the apparition of Bonaparte was intolerable. His establishment in the Consulate was a menace to all that survived of the eighteenth century. To the princes of Christendom the Man of Ajaccio appeared at first as an ambitious adventurer. Risen to power, they esteemed him a parvenu and political bastard. Now they beheld him confirmed by the almost unanimous voice of a great people. For him the Gallic enthusiasm burst out in wild applause. By the Treaty of Amiens he was recognized as the fellow of kings and emperors. The greatest portent of all was this—that the peaceable ratification of the Consulate for life tended to make permanent the results of the French Revolution, thus invalidating the ancient regime, and converting its offspring into stalk-horses and specters.

The phantoms of the Past accordingly resorted to conspiracy. France had blown her feudal ghosts across the borders. Some of them hovered in London. Some were in Berlin. All places on the right bank of the Rhine were infested by them. The descendants of the Houses of Bourbon, of Orleans, of Conde, flitted dimly in the horizon. They had their following. Their secret friends squatted in the very shadow of the Tuileries. As for open war, they had had enough of that. Of secret intrigues and plots and crimes there was now no end. The desperation of the Royalists became all the more profound when the Consulate was seen to give peace, and to justify itself in the estimation of mankind. In such a situation the life of the First Consul appeared to the disappointed and despairing progeny of the past as a hateful and all-prevailing fact that must be destroyed.



NAPOLEON BY GERARD.

The conspiracy which exploded in the Rue St. Nicaise was only the beginning of plots and plotting. It is in evidence that the agents of the British government lent a willing hand to the secret crimes that were to compass the destruction of Bonaparte. On his side there was corresponding vigilance. It was equivalent to death for any to lift the hand against him. His immediate subordinates were without exception loyal. But all the disappointed, hovering at a distance, scowled at his rising star. The years 1803-4 were pregnant with conspiracies. In the midst of the most untiring industry—consuming each day and a large part of the night in unparalleled application to the tasks of office—Napoleon was ever and anon distracted and enraged by the discovery of some plot against his life. His agents everywhere struck back, in light or darkness; and the bloody chalice was held to the lips of every intending assassin.

Among the plots of the day that of Georges Cadoudal, leader of the Chouans of Brittany, was conspicuous. From being an insurgent in the Royalist revolt of 1799, he had fled to England, where the count of Artois, afterwards Charles X., received him with open arms. In 1803 he made his way secretly to Paris. There he conspired with the disgraced General Pichegru, Napoleon's old master in mathematics at Brienne, to destroy the life of the First Consul. The plot was discovered, Pichegru was seized, imprisoned, and on the 5th of April, 1804, was strangled in his cell. Cadoudal, trying to escape, killed two policemen, but was overmastered, condemned, and on the 25th of June, 1804, was guillotined. General Moreau, the hero of Hohenlinden, who had become a Royalist, was accused of complicity in these schemes. Convicted of having knowledge of the plot of Cadoudal, he was condemned to two years' imprisonment; but Napoleon commuted the sentence into exile, and Moreau chose the United States as his refuge. After eight years, he entered the service of Russia, and in 1813 was mortally wounded at the battle of Dresden.

The result of these attempts was far-reaching. At this time the living representatives of the demolished monarchy were the count of Provence, afterwards Louis XVIII., who was at Warsaw; the count of Artois, in London; the young Orleans Philippe, afterwards the Citizen King, in Switzerland; and the duke of Enghien, descendant of the great Conde, at Ettenheim, in Baden. All of these were more or less implicated in the plots against Napoleon. The duke of Enghien in particular was believed to be a fellow-conspirator of Pichegru and Cadoudal. The latter had been secretly visited in Paris by a mysterious personage whom the passion of the hour declared to be the Conde prince. Notwithstanding the fact that Baden was neutral territory, a body of French soldiers was sent secretly to Ettenheim; the chateau was surrounded, and on the night of the 15th of March, 1804, the duc d'Enghien was seized in bed and hurried away to the fortress of Vincennes. A court-martial under General Hullin was immediately ordered, and without witnesses or other legal proof, the Duke was condemned to be shot. On the morning of the 21st of March, just before day, he was led into the ditch outside the wall, and there, by the ghastly light of torches, was shot dead. His body was thrown, without removal of the bloody garments, into a pit that had been digged the day before! The Consulate, as well as the Revolution which it succeeded, had a sword of sharpness for all its enemies.

The killing of Enghien created a tremendous sensation [illegible] Europe. Europe had not yet learned that the blood of kings and princes is even as the blood of other men. The European courts heard with horror and uplifted hands that a prince had been shot, as if by brigands, in the ditch of Vincennes. Abroad, in all governmental circles, opinion was confirmed against Bonaparte; but throughout France the execution of the duke of Enghien was applauded as an act of just vengeance against a conspirator. On the side of the First Consul many apologists appeared—some on the ground that he saved the Republic by saving himself at all hazards, and others on the ground that Napoleon had not been personally responsible for the killing of the prince.

Certain it is that the death of Enghien hastened the transformation of the Consulate into the Empire. The seat of the First Consul was already in everything but the name a throne. Why not make it a throne in fact? The facility of the French for change rendered easy the project which the temper of a heavier and more serious race would have rejected. Like the Athenian fancy, the Parisian mind flies quickly to the new. It hovers about the brilliant, the extraordinary. It satisfies itself with glory and enthusiasm. All these qualities in the soul of the people worked to the advantage and purpose of Bonaparte; but there was not wanting a measure of opposition. The Napoleonic desire soon found expression. Petitions began to be sent up from all parts of France. These were couched in suggestive hints to the First Consul that he should consolidate his power. Allusions about the advantages of a hereditary succession began to be circulated. Some of these were inspired by the agents of the government; others were spontaneous and sincere.

On the 13th of April, 1804, the first formal proposition for the conversion of the Consular Republic into an Empire was made by Curee in the Tribunate. The measure included the title of Empereur des Francais for Napoleon, with the right of hereditary succession in his family. Though the influence of the government was strongly devoted to the scheme, the proposal was met with serious opposition. The conspicuous voice of Lazare Nicolas Carnot, grandfather of the recently assassinated President of the French Republic, was heard above the din of affirmative applause. But on the 18th of May the measure was carried in the Senate. A consultum was promulgated, by which the Imperial dignity was conferred on Napoleon Bonaparte, and the decree was at once sent o the people. Another surprising election was held, at which 3,524,254 voters recorded their decision. Of these, 3,521,675 were in the affirmative, and only 2,579 in the negative! Whatever critical history may say of the antecedents of the Empire, certain it is that no other hereditary ruler of mankind was ever confirmed in power by such an acclaim of his countrymen! With good reason the feudal notion of territorial dominion hitherto expressed in the titles of rulers, gave way under this Imperial election; for Bonaparte was made Emperor, not of France, but of the French.

Notified by the Senate of the establishment of the Empire and of his own nomination thereto, Napoleon accepted the trust. The ceremony of notification was at St. Cloud. Josephine was also congratulated by the Senate. The Palace of St. Cloud was thronged on the occasion with the distinguished and elite of France. Just after the ceremony was over, a footman, rich in gold lace and scarf, made his way into the crowd, where the Baron Claude-Francois de Meneval—secretary to Bonaparte after the disgrace and dismissal of Bourrienne—was standing, and said: "Sir, the EMPEROR wishes to see you!" It was the first time that that astounding word had been applied to Bonaparte! History for nearly a century has confirmed it. At St. Helena he himself—offended at the small-minded officiality that designated him as General Bonaparte—said indignantly, "I shall always be known in history as the Emperor Napoleon!"

The Empire thus created was made to date from the 18th of May, 1804; but the coronation of Napoleon did not take place until the 2nd of the following December. Practically, the change in the government was not great. The stream of Consular power flowed into the widening river of Imperialism without a bend or the noise of cataracts. The coronation was a scene memorable in human annals. Pius VII., conciliated by the late Concordat, came willingly from Rome to crown the soldier of fortune, and to leave on him and his work the Papal benediction. It was at the altar of Notre Dame—where the Revolutionists of the Terror had danced the Carmagnole—that the Emperor-elect of the French knelt to receive the diadem. The Pope gave it; but Napoleon, taking it from his hand, put it on his own head—a thing most fitting to do; for he had made it for himself!

Josephine was crowned with her imperious lord. Returning from Notre Dame to the Tuileries, the Emperor, on reaching his own apartment, tore off as rapidly as he could the imperial vestments, and got himself into his usual apparel; for he was a man of business. The occasion was sunlit with splendor, and all hearts seemed full of life and light: all but one—the heart of Josephine. To her what ominous significance was in that clause of the senatus-consultum which made the crown hereditary in the family of Napoleon! Dire word was that word "family" to Marie Josephe Tascer, whilom Madame de Beauharnais, now Imperatrice des Francais. For she was forty-one and a-half years of age—epoch well nigh fatal to possible motherhood.

Only slight changes were made in the new Imperial administration. All such modifications looked to the unity and glory of the Empire. Napoleon preserved as much as he could of the personnel of the preceding Consular government. His two colleagues, Cambaceres and Lebrun, were appointed the one arch-chancellor and the other arch-treasurer of state; Joseph Bonaparte was made grand elector, and Louis the Imperial constable. Eighteen of the great generals who had become such with Napoleon in the field were made marshals of France. The transformation swept over the landscape like the dappled shadow of a sunny cloud. The Christmas holidays of 1804 came to Paris in a blaze of splendor. The Gallic world danced and smiled under wreaths of ivy and the flash of crystal candelabra, and the mutter of distant war was scarcely heard on the widened and confident borders of France.

Moliere.

Moliere, the French dramatist, tried hard to imitate the manners of the French nobility, but found the task one of great difficulty. After a reception he once attended he vowed he would never go to another until he got a new back, so tired did he become with bowing and scraping.

EDITORIAL CHANGE.

With this issue of The Constitutionalist the name of Walter Irving Clarke as city editor is removed from the head of its columns. The facts leading up to this action are substantially these:

On Saturday, May 18, Mr. Clarke left his desk promising to return on the evening of that day. Since that time he has been absent from his work. Upon the earnest solicitation of his wife and relatives it was agreed not fill his position until ten days had elapsed from the time of his departure, from the fact that urgent business, a sudden attack of illness or an accident may have been the cause of his continued absence, thus preventing him from conveying the reason thereof to his employer.

Eleven days have now elapsed and no word has been received from him. The position which he held has therefore been filled and Mr. Clarke is no longer connected with The Constitutionalist.

The new State reformatory will be built just outside of the limits of Rahway.

The Fourth Estate:—The Plainfield (N. J.) Daily Press celebrates its eighth birthday with a new and becoming dress.

In the death of Secretary of State Walter Q. Gresham the nation loses a type of a man whose personal convictions rather than party pledges and precedents guided his public career.

Mr. Nelson of Dunellen says that such land as the city wants for sewage purposes will cost $1,000 per acre. Mr. Nelson of Dunellen should come down just one-half in his estimate. The city has purchased 53 acres for $23,500.

After wrangling for a month or more over the disposition of spoils, the Paterson Board of Aldermen have at last got together and made their selections. The reformers of New Brunswick should follow suit.

Mr. Nelson of Dunellen says that the sewage disposal beds will cost the city $240,000. Mr. Nelson of Dunellen should have left off the last cipher and placed the comma after the 4. Then he would have been nearer right.

men may find a positive cure for Consumption, but it is a great thing to be able to prevent it, and in its early stages even to cure it. The only remedy yet known to prevent, as well as to cure in the early stages of the disease, is Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda.

It acts in two ways—as a medicine destroying the germs which cause the disease, and as a food stopping the wasting (the consuming), and replacing the lost flesh and tissue.

TO RESCUE PEARY.

MRS. PEARY'S LONG SOJOURN IN THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

Six Months of Darkness, Then Days of Bright Sunshine for 24 Hours. Wants to Save Her Spouse. She Will Lecture in Order to Raise the Funds.

While the warm spring sun is brightening the land and making it a bower of fragrant blooms, it seems strange to think of any one being in the barren wastes of rocks and perpetual snows. But this is just where Lieutenant Peary is spending the month of flowers, and where, unless a ship is sent to his relief, he will be destined to pass one more year.

In July, 1893, Lieutenant Peary and his wife left Philadelphia for the Arctic regions and in the September of the following year the wife returned to her home in this country, leaving her husband to spend the winter at his camp in the North. This winter Mrs. Peary has been at the home of her mother in Washington, where she and her baby are still living, waiting for the return of her husband and trying to raise money to charter a ship and go to his rescue. In describing her experience in the Arctics, Mrs. Peary said:

"Our first voyage was in June, 1891, when we started from Brooklyn on the Kite. But it was July when we came to the shores of Greenland, and a very desolate appearance they presented. Not a tree was to be seen, only a sparse undergrowth of low bushes and a wall of harsh, rocky cliffs frowning down on the tumbling sea.

"Mr. Peary had been unfortunate enough to break his leg on the voyage and had to be carried on a litter to the shore, where we had a tent erected and lived in it until a kind of cabin was built. It was now warm, for three months of the year in Greenland are very pleasant.

"The strangest of the new conditions which we had to face was the long day, for from the time we landed until in the fall it was a continuous bright sunshine that flooded the fields during twenty-four hours. It was hard to go to bed with a bright light out of doors telling you that it was day, but we were obliged to get rest and would make our meal times just as if the day was regularly divided as it is here.

"In November the weather grew very cold and as soon as the water froze over the Esquimaux came over in their sleds. I must say that of all nations of the earth these people are the most benighted. There is no religion among them; they have no written language and no morality, according to our ideas of that virtue.

"Men trade off their wives as they would a horse, and obligations of a husband to his wife are unheard of in this land. If a man fancies another man's wife he will go and make an offer and the husband only feels complimented at the tribute paid to the charms of his spouse. I do not think that in the whole of Greenland there is a person who has ever indulged in the luxury of a bath, and you cannot imagine a more filthy people.

"The days began to grow shorter, and by the 26th of October the sun had disappeared for a six months' stay. We were left in darkness, and had to do all our work by lamplight.

"My husband's wish is to come back to America this summer, but I do not see how we can send for him unless we can raise enough money to charter a vessel. It is for this object that I lecture. Of course, I dislike to appear in public, but I think it is my duty to do something for the relief of Mr. Peary, for if he does not get back this fall he will be compelled by the giving out of his provisions to spend the winter among the Esquimaux.

"When he gets home I think he will resume his old post in the navy, for he is now simply on leave and really under the orders of the Secretary."

Mrs. Peary is a very young and handsome woman, with a well rounded figure, hazel eyes, brown hair that waves into a soft bang and a clear complexion. The baby is a pretty little thing with flaxen hair and blue eyes, and has for a playmate an Esquimaux girl of about eight.

Endowment of Universities.

The noble gifts of Seth Low, John D. Rockefeller, Leland Stanford and others to our great colleges and universities are examples of wise generosity that make the world think better of its rich men. If the rich are to get richer and the poor poorer as the world goes onward to the end of destiny, what better method of helping to restore the equality can be found or suggested than the dissemination of knowledge among all the people? The endowments of our great institutions of learning might advantageously run less toward splendid buildings and more toward free scholarship.

The noblest gift to any college in this land was the Prince-Greenleaf bequest to Harvard in 1885, aggregating over $800,000 for the help of poor scholars. We hear much of scholarships, but in reality the end aimed at is not reached. A young man must have a "pull," as we say in politics to acquire a scholarship. Gentlemen, make these scholarships more easy of attainment for the poor young men of the country. The bone and sinew comes from the backwoods. Make it easy for that bone and sinew to get an education and we shall become the finest race on earth.

Use it in Time.

Catarrh starts in the nasal passages, affecting eyes, ears and throat, and is, in fact, the great enemy of the mucous membrane. Neglected colds in the head almost invariably precede catarrh, causing an excessive flow of mucous, and if the mucous discharge becomes interrupted the disagreeable results of catarrh will follow, such as bad breath, severe pain across forehead and about the eyes, a roaring and buzzing sound in the ears and oftentimes a very offensive discharge. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure for these troubles.

EXPLOITS OF A VENTRILOQUIST.

Mr. Hartley Writes of More of His Wonderful Practical Jokes.

Herman Weiss keeps a small tinware and crockery store. Desiring to replenish my culinary wares, I called on him to make selections a few nights ago.

"Harry, wait on this gentleman," Weiss called to his assistant. At the same instant I called as from the cellar: "Harry, Harry, come down here and let me out."

"Where are you?" shrieked the lad.

"In the cellar."

"How did you get there?"

"None of your business; come down here and let me out."

"No, I won't."

"Go down," said Weiss to his clerk, "and see who's there."

"Not I. He might do me up."

Weiss was in a quandary. He resolved to rid himself of his unwelcome visitor. Now thoroughly aroused, but fearing to venture down into the cellar himself, he called to the supposed intruder: "How did you get down there?"

Desiring to bring Weiss's voice up to its highest pitch, I replied as from below: "I can't hear you."

"How did you get down there?" fairly shrieked Weiss, as he threw himself on his hands and knees and bent close to the floor in order to make himself heard.

"We will see," he said, "who will hang. Harry, go get a policeman."

And forthwith Harry went. The enraged Weiss in his excitement wanted to tender me $3.75 in change for a $2 bill. I waited long enough to see the lad return with a big policeman. Together they repaired in haste to the cellar. I could hear the lad say, as they proceeded on the way:

"You'll hear him call you. He just told me I was a big fool."

Some idea of the extent to which victims may be carried when once under my control may be gleaned from the following incident, true in all its details:

Half a dozen Italian boys selling their "first editions" stood under the shadow of big St. Paul's on Vesey street, New York. Tony Manoli, Angelo and Michael Rossi, Jim Bertoli and Frank Romalo were the names of the five principal actors in the scene. It was midday. The lads were gazing curiously through the big iron fence bars, upon the grand old weather beaten tablets under which rest the bones of long departed folk of Revolutionary times. Suddenly a voice, as from the old church, called:

"Hey, Tony, bring me in a last edition."

The affrighted lads looked at each other in alarm. The more venturesome Tony cried out in answer:

"Where-a you are?"

"I am locked in here. Go and tell the policeman to let me out."

Tony was somewhat reluctant to do as he was bidden. The small lads all have an inherent fear of "de copper," so he replied mournfully:

"I'm afraida da cop."

"Go getta one," urged his companions, while one of them turned to me and asked:

"Wouldna you, Mist?"

"Who wants a paper?" I asked of Tony.

"A deada man. I tinka he mus-a be alive."

"Tony! Tony?" called the voice from the big edifice. "Let me out! I want to get out. I have been here seventy-five years and I am tired."

A crowd had now collected, but those in the rear could hear nothing, as the conversation I carried on was in the low, sepulchral tone. The lads appeared to be under a spell, and not a soul knew the cause of the disturbance.

"He mus-a be hungry." "How he get dere?" "Some-a bod mus-a let-a him out." "It's a big-a shame," they variously observed.

I called from the same spot: "Tony."

"What," he replied quickly, his face a picture of seriousness.

"Go over to the —— building and tell Mr. R. to come here right away. Tell him to let me out."

"What-a you name?"

I gave the name of a friend of Mr. R.

Imagine my surprise to see Mr. R. ten minutes later with a crowd of eager and panting urchins at his heels, making for the spot with great haste. I tried to retreat without being observed, but the quick eye of my friend detected me in the act. The joke dawned on him at once, and taking me by the arm he led me to the nearest "grocery" to top off the event.

C. A. HARTLEY.

The Quakeress Was Appreciative.

One is reminded these hot days of the story of the dainty and demure old Quakeress who didn't dare to express her feelings, and her neighbor in the street car who did. The atmosphere of the car was at the point which, did the thermometers name such a degree, would be termed "sweltering."

The soft cap and kerchief and the sweet smile of the Quakeress were apparently untroubled by such mundane matters as heat. Presently, a big, fat, puffing man entered the car. His countenance looked as if it had been well buttered, his breath came in quick, hard pants, and he was rubbing his handkerchief all over his face and neck.

As he took his seat beside the quiet Quakeress he ejaculated:

At which the dear old Quakeress turned to him and said: "Thank thee."

AMBITIOUS WOMEN

MAKE HEROES OF MEN.

She Will Brave Anything for the Man She Loves.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

When an ambitious woman loves a man she will spur him to heroic efforts. She will dare with him the rigors of the frozen North, and encourage him in daring dangers almost unsurmountable.

Women are by nature ambitious according to their physical and mental strength. Hope and ambition come with perfect health, but vanish before sickness and despair.

American women are, unfortunately, particularly subject to those painful female diseases that are the cause of so much hopelessness and misery.

Could all women realize the undeniable fact that they suffer unnecessarily, how much brighter life would be!

Lydia E. Pinkham devoted her life to the study of female diseases and their cause; and she discovered in the Vegetable Compound an absolute remedy. It succeeds in removing the cause of the trouble.

Women who rely more upon their own natural common-sense, rather than on the theories of their physicians, write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., and are soon restored to health.

Here is a living example: "Four months ago I was unable to stand on my feet. I had falling of the womb, kidney trouble, and inflammation of the bladder; the backache and bearing-down pains were dreadful. My physician could give me no relief. A friend said, try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Well, I did. Oh, if every suffering woman would do the same, they would be cured, cured absolutely and entirely, as I am!" MRS. WM. M. MOREY, 20 Seymour St., Pittsfield, Mass.

CHOIR RECEPTION.

Crescent Avenue Church Members Enjoy Themselves.

A reception that was complete in every detail, was given Saturday evening by the members of the Crescent Avenue Church to Organist F. J. Smith, and the quartette choir: Miss Banta, soprano; Miss Hardenburg, alto; E. E. Runyon, tenor; Mr. Lewis, basso; assisted by Mrs. F. J. Smith, elocutionist; and G. E. Devoll, tenor, of New York. Mr. Smith had arranged an exceedingly fine programme of music for the occasion, and the rendition was perfect in every particular. The very large audience that filled the chapel of the church was largely composed of a number of Plainfield's music-loving people, and each selection received several encores. Mrs. Smith, as an elocutionist, gave evidence of unlimited talent and power, and her recitations with piano accompaniment were delightful. She was recalled several times, so fully appreciated were her efforts to please.

The appearance of G. E. Devoll was occasion for hearty applause. He is not a stranger in Plainfield, and his talent is well known. His rendition of Thine", by Bohm, completely captured the audience, and he was obliged to respond to a most flattering reception.

It would be manifestly unfair to enter into any criticism of the programme, as its uniformity was so marked. Suffice to say that in every detail it was all that could be desired. It was as follows:

Duett—In Absence Spring Song	Tassen
Misses Banta and Hardenberg.
Recitation—Village Gossip	Kate Wiggin
Mrs. Smith.
Fair, Sweet and Holy	Canter
E. E. Runyon.

At the conclusion of the above all were invited to the room below where delicious refreshments were served by the women in charge, and all were given an opportunity to meet those who had furnished them an evening of rare pleasure.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Richards received, assisted by the elders wives as follows:

Mrs. F. H. Andrews, Mrs. John Bushnell, Mrs. John Leal, Mrs. Leander Lovell, Mrs. I. C. Pierson, Mrs. Andrew Gavett, Mrs. H. C. Squires and Mrs. J. K. Myers.

A CAVALRY CHARGE.

BY M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

We had been held in reserve on the second day at Gettysburg so long that men and horses became nervous and afraid. My horse was an old veteran who would drop his head and pick at the green grass with a battery firing on either side of us, but as the moments dragged away on this occasion he evinced a woman's nervousness. I looked down the lines and saw that the alignment was constantly being broken by the horses backing up or forging ahead. They could see the fighting to the right and in front, and the smoke from the Union battery to the left and in front of us drove back and over us and the horses breathed it in and blew it out of their nostrils in gasps.

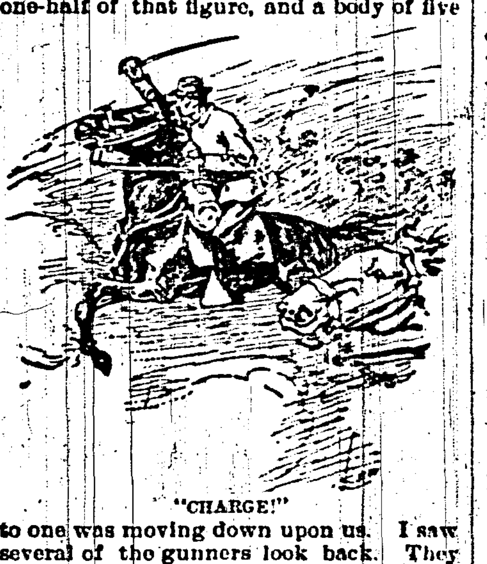
The wind had shifted a bit to blow the smoke to our left, and down across the meadows we saw the Confederate cavalry forming, with the green woods for a background. Jeb Stuart's men were there, Ashby's men, men from Hampton's legion, Imboden's Virginians, Rosser's rangers, guerrillas from Mosby's command. There were fragments from every cavalry command we had met on the turnpikes of old Virginia, and there wasn't a squadron which wouldn't stand for a charge. The battery began firing more rapidly, and there wasn't a man of us who did not realize what was coming long enough before we got the word. Some of the horses knew it too. You could feel them filling their lungs and stringing up their nerves for hard work.

"They are going to charge our battery!" was the exclamation on every man's lips, but we could not be sure of just the part we were to play in the affair. If dismounted and used as infantry to support the guns, we could make a desperate fight of it, and for several minutes we listened to hear such an order given. During this time an aid rode up with an order to the colonel. It was an order from the general to retire the battery. It had come too late. Some of the battery horses had been killed and a number of others wounded by the explosions of the [illegible] shells thrown at us from the woods by the Confederate cavalry, and the way [illegible] was also blocked by the ammunition wagons which had come up. The battery would be lost or saved right where it stood.

At the end of five minutes, while we yet sat waiting, the troopers in gray wheeled into line under a fire which must have tried the nerves of the bravest, and then the compact mass got the word to advance. They were coming for our battery, which was without infantry supports. There we stood, two thin, short lines, representing a thousand dragoons, but not numbering one-half of that figure, and a body of five to one was moving down upon us. I saw several of the gunners look back. They saw the odds and wondered perhaps why we did not run away.



"CHARGE!"

"Attention!"

We had obeyed the order before it was given.

"Right dress!"

We were a few seconds ahead of the command.

"Forward—draw sabers—guide right—trot!"

Ah! We are off! The gray moves north and the blue moves south. We are going to meet in the meadow below. We must hold them back until infantry supports can be brought up. Every man knows that he is moving down into a maelstrom of death, but no one lags. A strange exultation creeps into the heart. It is as if you had heard some grand, good news, and wanted to shout over it and tell everybody of your good luck.

"Gallop—charge!"

Death! Why, if one could die a score of times instead of only once, there would be no fear. I sit so lightly in the saddle that my horse seems to have no weight to carry. He skims over the ground as if he had wings, and I begin cheering and yelling in chorus with my comrades. It is a living missile of 500 men thrown at the front of 3,000. What a crash there will be! How horses will go down and men pitch from their saddles! Afraid? No! Why, man, I would not miss this scene for a year's life! My hand clutches the saber with a strength I did not know I possessed. I feel a hunger for blood such as I never felt before.

"Yi, yi! Whoop—rah!" and we strike them fair in the center. The 500 have the greatest momentum, and we drive through the 3,000 as a wedge is pounded into soft wood. Men strike at me. There is a flash, flash, and a pop, pop, of pistols. I strike back. I feel the desire of the tiger to slay.

"Rally!"

We have driven through the mass, and the bugles sound the call to gather for the return. The horses obey it without a touch of the rein. It seems that the whole living mass is riding in a circle, and that there is blood on every man and horse. All of a sudden we shoot out from under the smoke cloud into the sunshine—not the 500, but the 300—and the battery opens again. We are to the right of it, and it sends grapeshot into a wild mob to drive it back into the cover of the woods. It is a sight to look down over that field. Five hundred dead and wounded men and horses are lying there. It is only as I sit on my horse and look over the field that I begin to feel weak and grow frightened. My head begins to swim, things grow dark, and some one helps me to the ground. I have a pistol ball in my shoulder, and the blood is running down my back from a saber cut on the head.

Not Forgotten.

When the sun sinks to rest on Memorial day, lighting with red flashes the green hills of May, wherever the dust of a soldier awaits the call of Gabriel's bugle there will flutter a fresh flag and bloom a wreath of flowers. Man dies, soldier and civilian, in war and peace, but the memory and gratitude of the nation live and will live till republics are no more and the earth is rolled together like a scroll.

THE ASSASSINATION.

NOAH BROOKS' RECOLLECTIONS OF THE GREAT TRAGEDY.

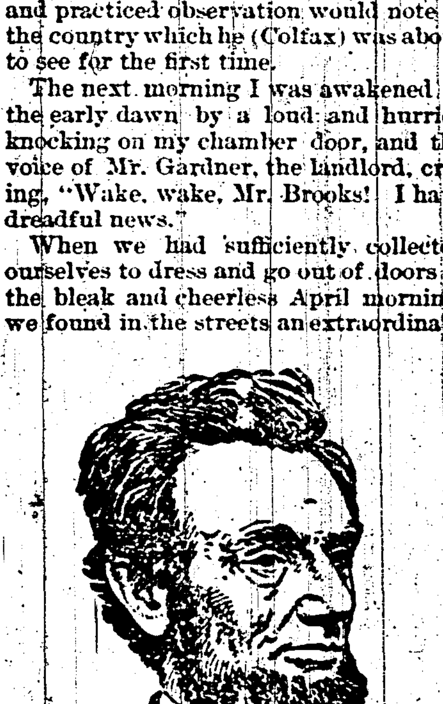
The President Did Not Want to Go to the Theater, but Would Not Disappoint the Public, Which Expected Him.

The afternoon and evening of April 14, 1865, were cold, raw and gusty. Dark clouds enveloped the capital, and the air was chilly with occasional showers. Late in the afternoon I filled an appointment by calling on the President at the White House, and was told by him that he "had had a notion" of sending for me to go to the theater that evening with him and Mrs. Lincoln; but he added that Mrs. Lincoln had already made up a party to take the place of Gen. and Mrs. Grant, who had somewhat unexpectedly left the city for Burlington, N. J. The party was originally planned for the purpose of taking Gen. and Mrs. Grant to see "Our American Cousin," at Ford's Theater, and when Grant had decided to leave Washington, he (the President) had "felt inclined to give up the whole thing"; but as it had been announced in the morning papers that this distinguished party would go to the theater that night, Mrs. Lincoln had rather insisted that they ought to go, in order that the expectant public should not be wholly disappointed.

On my way home I met Schuyler Colfax, who was about leaving for California, and who tarried with me on the sidewalk a little while, talking about the trip and the people whom I knew in San Francisco and Sacramento whom he wished to meet. Mr. Lincoln had often talked with me about the possibilities of his eventually taking up his residence in California after his term of office should be over. He thought, he said, that that country would afford better opportunities for his two boys than any of the older States; and when he heard that Colfax was going to California, he was greatly interested in his trip, and said that he hoped that Colfax would bring him back a good report of what his keen and practiced observation would note in the country which he (Colfax) was about to see for the first time.

The next morning I was awakened in the early dawn by a loud and hurried knocking on my chamber door, and the voice of Mr. Gardner, the landlord, crying, "Wake, wake, Mr. Brooks! I have dreadful news."

When we had sufficiently collected ourselves to dress and go out of doors in the bleak and cheerless April morning, we found in the streets an extraordinary spectacle. They were suddenly crowded with people—men, women and children thronging the pavements and darkening the thoroughfares. It seemed as if everybody was in tears. Pale faces, streaming eyes, with now and again an angry, frowning countenance, were on every side. Men and women who were strangers accosted one another with distressed looks and tearful inquiries for the welfare of the President and Mr. Seward's family. The President still lived, but at half-past seven o'clock in the morning the tolling of the bells announced to the lamenting people that he had ceased to breathe. His great and loving heart was still. The last official bulletin from the War Department stated that he died at twenty-two minutes past seven o'clock on the morning of April 15.



PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Instantly flags were raised at half-mast all over the city, the bells tolled solemnly, and with incredible swiftness Washington went into deep, universal mourning. All stores, government departments and private offices were closed, and everywhere, on the most pretentious residence and on the humblest hovels, were the black badges of grief. Nature seemed to sympathize in the general lamentation and tears of rain fell from the moist and somber sky. The wind sighed mournfully through streets crowded with sad faced people, and broad folds of funeral drapery flapped heavily in the wind over the decorations of the day before.

Wandering aimlessly up F street toward Ford's Theater we met a tragical procession. It was headed by a group of army officers walking bareheaded, and behind them, carried tenderly by a company of soldiers, was the bier of the dead President, covered with the flag of the Union, and accompanied by an escort of soldiers who had been on duty at the house where Lincoln died. As the little cortege passed down the street to the White House every head was uncovered, and the profound silence which prevailed was broken only by sobs and by the sound of the measured tread of those who bore the martyred President back to the home which he had so lately quitted full of life, hope and courage.—Century.

WORTHY LITTLE WORKERS.

Bright Misses Hold a Successful and Pleasant Fair.

A charming event was the fair held Saturday afternoon and evening on the lawn adjoining the residence of Mrs. Gilmore on West Second street. It was arranged and given entirely by Lulu Gilmore, May Mulford, Isabella Edwards, Violet Beerbower, and Helen Harned. Their object was to raise money to help the poor and they worked hard to make it a success.

A large number of very pretty articles were made of paper, such as dolls, flowers, small boxes, handkerchief cases. The lawn presented a pleasing picture with the various tables prettily trimmed.

The fancy table was in charge of Lulu Gilmore, and the candy table was well taken care of by Miss May Mulford, while the lemonade and cake was in the excellent care of Violet Beerbower. Isabelle Edwards and Helen Harned as waitresses looked after the needs of those present in serving.

As a result of their earnest efforts $17.67 was realized. There are a few things left which the little girls wish to dispose of, and as soon as the weather is clear they will endeavor to sell them at the gate of Lulu Gilmore's home.

MR. GOLDSTEIN INNOCENT.

He Was the Victim of Being Too Accommodating to Friends.

Jacob Goldstein, who was indicted by the Grand Jury on the charge of aiding, assisting and receiving the stolen goods of the Robinson boarding house theft, appeared in court in Elizabeth this morning and pleaded not guilty to the charge. He was released on $500 bail for appearance at trial on June 7.

It is the consensus of opinion by those conversant with the circumstances of the case that Mr. Goldstein is entirely innocent of the charges preferred against him. Though the goods were in his store a day or two, just as soon as he learned that there had been a robbery, he immediately made known the fact of their being there, and lent whatever aid he could in locating the guilty parties.

Judge Coddington appeared for Mr. Goldstein in court this morning.

OLDEST MAN LIVING.

NOAH RABY, OF THE PISCATAWAY POOR FARM, NEW JERSEY.

Physically Sound as a Nut, and Frisky as a Two-year-old. Born in North Carolina, Served Under Farragut and Heard Gen. Washington Speak. Relishes His Toddy.

Is Noah Raby, of the Piscataway Poor Farm, New Jersey, the oldest man in the world? If the story of his life which he tells be true he has passed his 123d birthday.

It was about eighty-three years ago, according to his recollection, that Noah Raby, ordinary seaman, received his discharge papers from the stanch frigate Brandywine, which had just finished a cruise of inspection of the various ports of the United States and was then docked at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The day after he left the naval service he betook himself to New Jersey, where he joined himself to a farmer and for money agreed to serve as a hired man. Since that time he has never stepped outside the boundaries of New Jersey. For more than half a century, with more or less steadiness, he followed the occupation he had chosen, and then, twenty-eight years ago, being full of years and decidedly averse to earning his own living any longer, he settled down at the Poor Farm in the township of Piscataway, not far from New Brunswick, and there he has since remained.

To-day he is totally blind, but his eyes, though sunken, have the sparkle of one who can see perfectly. His body is bent and his shoulders are contracted, but the muscles of his arms and legs are firmer than those of many a man not yet thirty. His jaws are toothless and his words are uttered with a whistling accompaniment, but his voice is strong and full and his laugh is as hearty as it was a century and more ago. His long hair is white, but thick and luxuriant; his whiskers are iron gray, his heavy, bushy eyebrows are still almost jet black, and he can dispose of a solid drink of good rye whisky with a sort of smack that betokens the heartiest relish. Though he believes his father to have been an Indian, his skin is white, and his features are of a pronounced Caucasian type.

When Raby was 21 he got away from Mr. Mills Field's plantation, in Gates county, N. C., where he was born, and started out to find employment.

"It was at Portsmouth and Norfolk, suh, that I shipped," the old man continued, "and I shipped on the Constitution—the Con-sti-tu-tion, suh. She had been a great vessel once, but then she was old and used for a receiving ship. Well, I worked for a year on the Constitution, going up and down the ratlines to the top 'on the mast, but no further. I never got to be anything more than an ordinary seaman. I didn't want to be an able seaman. I didn't want to go higher up the mast than the 'top.' That was as near heaven as I ever wanted to go till my time came.

"After I'd been on the Constitution a year I went on the Brandywine, on the inspection cruise. Do I remember the captain's name? You bet I do. It was Farragut. He was a fine, portly, good looking man, suh, and another man of the same name was a big captain afterward. No, I was never flogged, but I've seen lots of others punished. Once I come near being, but it was just because I tried to get away when some one else was being punished. Which of the ports we visited did I like the best? All of 'em, suh—all of 'em. I could have shore leave three times a week when we were in port, and we could always find ways of having good times—there were always bright eyes to shine on Jack Tar in them old days, suh—certain."

It was while he was at Norfolk and Portsmouth that Raby says he heard General Washington make a speech. Raby is not certain what the General was talking about, but there is no doubt in the oldest man's mind the Father of His Country was indignant and excited.

"Yes, suh," said Raby, "I saw the old Gineral and I heard him talk. He was pretty mad, too—oh, gracious, yes! I shall never forget one thing he said—it has stuck to me most a hundred years now:

"'Go right on, fellow citizens, as you have been going on, and I assure you that we shall have the devil to pay in this Republic and no pitch hot!'

"I left the navy because I was afraid there'd be a war, and I didn't want to fight. Well, there was a war, but I didn't see no fighting, only on the sea, and then I was on land and a good ways off. I've lost my discharge papers and I'm sorry. If I had 'em maybe I could get a pension, and, anyway, I could prove my age by them."

Are There No Clubs in Michigan.

"Do you appreciate," the old man asked of the youth who sought the hand of his daughter, "that marriage is attended with greater difficulties and discouragement than it ever was before?"

The youth would have spoken had not the patriarch waved him to silence.

Only the Market Value.

"It seems to me that you want an unreasonably high price for this joke," said the editor.

"But," said the humorist, "it is an Irish bull. And when you consider the present high price of beef you must see that I am demanding nothing more than the ruling rates."—Cincinnati Tribune.

PYTHIAN PLEASURES.

Perseverance Lodge Knows How to Give a Good Time.

Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, Knights of Pythias, gave their members and friends an enjoyable time Friday evening at their rooms on West Second street. The attendance was very large. Eugene O'Reilly's orchestra opened the programme with a a selection which was followed with appropriate remarks by District Deputy Patterson. Robert Clark then rendered a solo. A recitation was given by H. S. Thatcher. Wm. Holmes sang a solo.

As an intermission Thomas Schaefer gave an exhibition of Indian club swinging. Edward Wolf was then introduced and gave character sketches. After a recitation by Miss Haberle and a solo by Asa Pope, "Bob" Whittaker then appeared and kept the audience in a continual laughter with funny remarks. A song by Master Robinson and one by Mr. Marrinus, preceded John Carney whose appearance was sufficient to have the desired effect of creating laughter.

The programme closed with a piano duet by the Misses Barnett. In the banquet room a collation was served. The committee to whom the success of the event was due consisted of Chairman J. S. Higham, B. H. Whittaker, J. Putterson, S. J. Robinson, and T. S. Milliken.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. Parker Mason has returned from an extended visit at Worcester, Mass.

Walter Lane, Henry Piker and C. Schantz will spend tomorrow at Long Branch.

David White of this city, who has been stopping at Keyport, is home for a few days.

Miss Zulia Shroeder of 929 Watchung avenue is visiting friends in Philadelphia this week.

Mrs. W. J. Stanton of New York is the guest of Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Carman of Somerset street.

Mrs. E. H. Mumford, who is visiting friends in Brooklyn, will return to her home on Woodland avenue, Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Mundy have leased a flat at 215 Somerset street, where they are at home to their friends.

Joseph Flack and family of Central avenue have leased the new house just completed by John Bicknell on South avenue, into which they moved yesterday.

William A. Fondey of New York has leased the W. S. Benton property on the Rahway road for the Summer months. Mr. Fondey will take possesion June 1.

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Neal, who have been visiting at the home of Mrs. Neal's mother, Mrs. Albert Hedden of Park avenue, left this morning for their home in Boston.

Brereton Platt of West Front street, who had charge of the delivery of The Daily Press "Plainfield Souvenir", has accepted a position with the Atlas Fire Assurance Company in New York, and will commence his new duties Monday morning.

CYCLING COMMENT.

A. C. Batchelor of Buffalo, the noted cycling journalist, will be among the notables at the National Circuit meet.

Robert Gentle, Chief Consul of the New Jersey L. A. W., will be a prominent figure at the Decoration Day meet.

No entry fee will be charged for the special one-mile scratch race of Class A men, for which the New York Times has offered a $50 gold medal.

As the income derived from sanction fees of the L. A. W., is so far insufficient to provide for one official referee to follow the National Circuit, it has been decided by the board that an official referee may be appointed for each circuit meet.

Isaac B. Potter, a prominent New York lawyer and Chief Counsel of the New York State Racing Board, will be a guest of the Crescent Wheelmen at the meet next Thursday. He has been very active in the good roads movement in New York State.

Westfield is sorely perplexed with the rickety and dangerous sidewalk question. The township committee are preparing an ordinance to compel property owners to make necessary repairs where needed. While the officials are about it they better provide for the expense of enforcing the ordinance, else their efforts will be void of results. North Plainfield has had experience with just such a state of affairs. And it was not a pleasant one for the borough officials, and the pedestrians—well they can speak for themselves.

Billy Lee Gets a License.

The Court of Common Pleas sitting in Elizabeth this morning granted the application of William Lee for a liquor license in Scotch Plains.

BEYOND THE STREAM.

Matters of Fact That Are of Interest to Boroughites

—The borough school closes for the Summer June 20.

—Dr. Cooley is now finishing up the State census. His report must be in by June 1.

—There is not one single solitary Democrat holding office in the borough today.

—The Maple avenue brick works have finished a burn of 300,000 brick, the first kiln of the season.

—Charles Huff, a former resident, who has been absent for ten years, is visiting George Pope of Manning avenue.

—Lew Kline, the extract man, is making muscle with the assistance of a cord of hickory wood and a buck saw.

—Boys who would like to join Mr. French's camping party this Summer should go to the Y. M. C. A. Building this evening.

—Chief Justice Brown coincides with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in their conclusions regarding the income tax.

—Invitations for a Decoration Day tournament on the grounds of the Hillside Tennis Club have been issued. The playing will be commenced at 10 a. m.

—The board walk on Somerset street, between Fairview and Grandview avenues, is in a very dangerous condition and needs the prompt attention of the property owners or the borough authorities.

—Mr. Dixon, who recently purchased the Rice farm at Greenbrook, has had nearly 100 electric lights put in the house, barn and outbuildings. It is the intention of Mr. Dixon to make this place an ideal country home.

—John Vetterlein is taking the school census under the direction of District Clerk S. B. Joseph. It must be finished by June 15. Last year the number of children from 5 up to 18 years of age numbered about 1,050.

—Who will be the next to set their curbing back in front of their property on Somerset street? Many property owners have already done so and unless the Council orders the same to be done by ordinance it seems that it will be a long time before the street will be widened to the width it should be. Two feet on each side of the street would be a blessing to the drivers of vehicles on that busy thoroughfare. Widen the street.

Of General Interest.

The American Bible Society is putting forth a vigorous effort to place a copy of the Scriptures in every family in the land. In pursuance of this plan, a representative of the society will begin a canvass of this city on Monday next. By request of the Ministers Association he will also make inquiries respecting the church relations of those whom he visits. The purpose is to ascertain their name and address, with church preferences, so that the pastors and visiting committees may extend a welcome to strangers and non-members. Will all kindly aid in the good work.

In Elizabeth a Board of Trade has just been organized to boom the town. In Plainfield a Board of Trade is dying a death that comes from inocuous desuetude.

The Dunellen Call advises Plainfield citizens who are opposed to sewage beds to hold mass meetings, and protest against the adoption of the ordinance giving the Council the requisite powers. The proper place for objections from Plainfield people is at the Councilmanic hearing, as suggested in these columns yesterday. Mass meetings are too much on the bullying order.

Girls Club to Open Tuesday.

The Girls Club will be opened at 309 West Second street Tuesday evening, May 28. All girls who would enjoy a pleasant reading room and place in which they may meet their friends, and who would like an opportunity to learn dressmaking, cooking, etc., are invited to be present. A programme will be furnished, consisting of violin and piano music, and recitations. After this refreshments will be served and a social time enjoyed. All are cordially and heartily invited to come.

A Perilous Job.

Newton Wyckoff has the contract to paint the standpipe of the Plainfield Water Supply Company. It is rather a perilous undertaking, as the pipe is 140 feet in height. Scaffolds were swung yesterday, and work was begun this morning.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Sperling have returned to their home, 136 East Fourth street, after spending a month at New Brunswick.

THESE AWFUL DOGS.

They Are Accused of What the Feline Tribe is Distinguished For.

To the Editor of The Daily Press :—

While on the subject of dogs, will you allow the undersigned to have a word. I like dogs, but under certain conditions of locality and proper restraint. That the freedom given to Plainfield dogs has become a marked nuisance, is shown by your correspondent, "Fencer". They cause an unnecessary strain on morals, and it may be on religion, for when a person has retired to his little bed with mind calm and contemplative, in peace with the world and inclined to be good, some nearby canine sets up a howl or bark, and its neighbors at once join in chorus, and, perhaps, at once bad words spring to the would-be sleeper's mind and vengeance to his heart, and he becomes instantly a bad man. Who should be held responsible? Clearly the owner, for if the beast will not otherwise behave it should be shut up or muzzled at night. But the above is not the worst feature of the outrage. In case of nervousness or sickness the noise of dogs may become a very serious matter; may "murder sleep", which may be of prime necessity to the patient.

Then as to trespassing upon lawns, gardens, etc. It is not incumbent on occupants of property to "fence" against invaders, (even if that would be a preventive, but it would not), but it is the duty of all to avoid trespassing either by their dogs or otherwise. Not wishing to occupy more of your space, I would merely suggest that the moral law and civil law forbid dogs enjoying the "freedom of the city" of Plainfield, which is now theirs, and all to the discomfort of those who regard this city as a quiet, restful, recuperative, healthful home.

A Sufferer.

Union Men, Read This.

"If the principles that organized labor are contending for are worth anything they are worth standing up for, and in what better way than in the clothing one wears can a man show his loyal mind?

"Werner, the clothier, has just taken the agency for the celebrated 'Carhartt brand of Union made, 'never rip' pants and overalls.

"The representative members of Union, No. 74, United Garment Workers of America, employes of Hamilton, Carhartt Co., Detroit, Mich., do hereby beseech you to give your support to the overalls, pants, etc., manufactured by this firm, who operate a strictly 'Union' factory.

"Please call at Werner's Clothing House and examine these goods and speak a good word for our Union if you think we deserve it.

Candidates will be examined in the following subjects: Arithmetic, algebra, geometry, English grammar, descriptive geography, physical geography, history of the United States, physic and chemistry. The excellent opportunity offered to the youth of the State to get an education free, has heretofore been fully appreciated by the young men of this vicinity, the scholarships allotted to Union County have been filled each year since the enactment of the law. Bound to Celebrate.

William Newcorn says that from all indications the Fourth of July celebration will be a large success, and that it cannot possibly be a failure, because, if the local societies do n't take hold of it and make it so, the entire State membership of the Red Men will be invited to come, and show the citizens what a celebration is. One of the latest organizations to approve of the celebration is the Y. M. C. A., President Murray having appointed D. A. MacPhie, A. W. Gavett, and G. Q. WOULD N'T BUDGE.

Barry Refused to Move for the Trolley Cars.

Residents of Somerset street near Craig place were very much amused this afteroon about 1:30. A man named Barry with a horse and wagon was driving along on the tracks of the street railway when the harness used on his steed broke in several places. The man was slightly under the influence of the flowing bowl and was in a quandry as to just what to do. However, he happened to think he had several hundred feet of wire in the wagon and forthwith commenced to straighten it out.

In the meantime Car No. 6 came along, and was obliged to stop. The railroad employes used persuasive argumente to get the man to move, but he said he would n't until he got ready. Then Motorman Morris Higgins endeavored to lead the horse, but the animal evidently intended to stand by her owner, so she kicked and balked so much that Higgins gave up the task. When Barry had fastened the harness together with the wire, he got in the wagon and drove off. A fact worthy of note is that there was no marshal in sight, and the man had everything his own way, holding the car for about fifteen minutes.

The entries for the National Circuit meet of the Crescent Wheelmen are published today, and include the best and fastest riders in the country. Thursday will be one of the biggest days Plainfield has ever witnessed, and Plainfielders should turn out en masse and attend the races. The members of the Crescents have worked hard and persistently to make their event a success, and no better method of expressing appreciation of their efforts can be evinced than transforming their ticket office in a veritable bank on the afternoon of the meet. Plainfielders have an outside reputation of being very liberal, and their reputation should be maintained Thursday.

PLEASANT FAREWELL.

Reception Given to the Retiring President of the Y's.

A farewell is usually a sad event, but the farewell reception tendered to Miss Amey Green by her fellow-workers in the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union at the home of Miss Delphine Bowers of Franklin place and LaGrande avenue yestereay afternoon, was anything but sorrowful.

Miss Green has served very efficiently for the last four years as president of the Y's. From 4 to 6, Miss Green's many friends were hospitably received and enjoyed a very pleasant social time, during which an informal musical programme was rendered.

The guests were received by Miss Mamie Brown, Miss Lulu Lewis, Miss Delphine Bowers, Mrs. Frank Clawson, Miss Mary French and Miss Bessie Tithworth.

The dining room presented a charming appearance with its tasteful yellow decorations, and here the table was presided over by Mrs. William Stillman and Miss Louise Green, while Miss Lulu Patton and Miss Etta Blish served the dainty refreshments. The programme consisted of a piano solo by Miss Hattie Gardner, a violin solo by Miss Violet Truell, accompanied by Miss Bessie Titsworth, a vocal solo by Miss Delphine Bowers, a recitation by Miss Lulu Lewis with piano obligato by Miss Dewey, a piano solo by Miss Dewey, and a vocal solo by Miss Julia Ketcham. Each number was artistically rendered, and thoroughly enjoyed by all.

About seventy-five were present during the afternoon, and all expressed themselves as having had a most delightful time, and highly complimented the charming and accomplished hostess on providing such a pleasant and enjoyable entertainment.

THE BANK ROBBERS.

New York Police Think They Have a Clew.

DAN DYSON THE SUSPECTED ONE.

The New York Morning Journal Publishes a Plausible Story About the First National Bank Theft—The Methods Were Like Those of Th's Great Crook—The Detectives Are Shadowing Him.

The detectives of New York and surrounding cities have a theory, that may develop into a clew, as to the planner and perpetrator of the Plainfield Bank robbery.

This robbery, which took place about a month ago, was the most cunningly planned and executed of any that has occurred in this part of the country for more than a decade. This fact excited the wonder of the police at the time and set them to thinking.

Every act of the robbers showed the expert craft skill and adroitness of a congregation of bank sneaks and burglars who were thought to be dead, or behind prison bars, for they never reform, according to detective belief and tradition.

Jimmy Hope, "Old Bill" Vosburg, Charlie Perrine, Clutch Donohue, Joe Chapman and the long list of old-time crooks are all dead or accounted for, and still the Plainfield Bank was robbed of over $20,000 on precisely the same line of operation and by the same methods followed by these cracksmen, whose exploits were far more daring in the eyes of the modern detective than any ever performed by Dick Turpin or Claude Duval, while their plunder, in the aggregate, would ransom a king.

So the detectives put on their thinking caps, with the result that they have evolved the theory that the man who planned and probably helped to execute the robbery of the Plainfield Bank is none other than Daniel Dyson, alias Dan Noble, probably the most daring and ingenious bank burglar, sneak, forger and all-round crook that America ever produced.

The theory is founded on the fact that Dan Noble, by which name Dyson is best known to the police, returned to this country from England, where he had just completed a sentence of twenty years, a very short time before the Plainfield robbery took place.

Noble was released from prison in London on March 17, and immediately sailed for New York. Although the proceeds of his crimes should have made him a millionaire, he is said to have left prison almost penniless.

When he was liberated he told the prison officials that he had a fortune "planted" in America, and if it was not forthcoming when he returned there would be bloodshed. This money, which runs into the hundreds of thousands, was held in trust for him by some of his relatives and former "pals".

Since his arrival in New York he has kept very much in the shade, and has not even reported to Superintendent Byrnes, at Police Headquarters- a rule followed by all crooks who wish to remain in New York and conduct themselves as law-abiding citizens.

But, while he has not renewed old acquaintanceships or reappeared in his old haunts (most of them have disappeared, by the way), it has been whispered around that Noble has met with some difficulty in regaining his share of the proceeds of many crimes, and that trouble is brewing.

No bloodshed has been reported yet, but the Plainfield bank robbery has. A great deal of the money stolen by the old "Noble's gang" has been invested in real estate in New Jersey and Westchester County. Of course, the investments have been made in the names of others, and that of old Dan does not appear on record.

The police theory is that Dan, finding himself "broke" and in danger of being cheated out of his "earnings," followed his old instinct and decided to "turn a trick".

While there are no Jimmy Hopes or Little Horaces of this generation, there is an abundance of raw material that could be used to good account under the tutelage and direction of a consummate artist like Dan Noble.

It is concluded that Dan got together a couple of these tyros, taught them the artistic touches of his profession, and turned the Plainfield trick with their help.

It is supposed that he took the responsible duty of "stalling" himself, and the descriptions furnished by the victims of the robbery tally exactly with that of the now venerable bank burglar, sneak and forger.

It will be remembered that a man of aged and striking appearance entered the bank and engaged the cashier in conversation, while one of the three confederates sneaked to the safe and escaped with two bundles of bank notes, containing more than $20,000.

The description of this venerable-looking man tallies with that of Dan Noble, as he is today, to the letter and the dot. It is that of a man of sixty-one years old, six feet high, with a white beard, bluish-gray eyes and a long, thin nose.

The police have Noble located in a little town near New York, and are shadowing his every movement. They are also trying to have the cashier of the bank get a peep at Noble, but have not yet succeeded in doing so. If the identification is at all positive, Noble will be taken into custody. He is so surrounded that he cannot escape, but the police wish to postpone the arrest until they can trace some of the stolen money, which they have thus far been unable to do. They fear a premature arrest.

PLUCKY BOY, MAD DOG.

Charles Sutterlin Chases Down the Hydrophobia Inoculator.

The citizens of the borough are under obligations to a young man named Charles Sutterlin for persistently following up and shooting a mad dog. The animal made its appearance yesterday afternoon in the dooryard of his father, Gustav Sutterlin, Greenbrook road, near Duer street, and made an attack on Sutterlin's dog, who is kept chained. A number of little children were playing in the yard at the time and fortunately escaped into the house on the appearance of the snapping and growling cur.

Young Sutterlin at once made up his mind that the animal was mad, and getting a gun from the house started after the dog, who was then leaving the premises by way of Greenbrook road. He followed him to the home of Mr. Bovey on Somerset street, where he chewed at the pickets in order to get out of the dooryard. Here young Sutterlin took his first shot at the animal, but only made the fur fly from his back. From thence the dog ran to John McLaughlin's house, nearly opposite, and bit a dog belonging to him. Then he started up Mountain avenue, snapping at hitching posts and everything he met. Young Sutterlin followed the dog up Mountain avenue, through dooryards, until he got a good shot at him on Westervelt avenue, near Mountain avenue, where he killed him.

A Veteran's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Isaac Hilyard was held Thursday afternoon from his home in Dunellen, Rev. Stewart Custard, pastor of the M. E. Church of that place, officiating. Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., of this city, of which decedent was a member, attended in a body. The remains were brought to Plainfield and interment was in Evergreen Cemetery. The firing squad in charge of I. L. McVoy, consisted of John Emmons, Israel Compton, W. R. Moore, W. R. Mattox, A. King, James Lewis and H. Drake. The pallbearers were: Francis Whitely, Isaac Brokaw, M. C. Dobbins and William Pangborn. The Grand Army service was performed at the grave, participated in by Commander Coriell, and Chaplain Goodwin. Frank Allen of the Independent Fife and Drum Corps, Phillip Hapeny and Daniel Dunavan, of the Cornet Band furnished the music for the occasion.

Plainfield Druggists Respond.

At the State convention of the New Jersey Pharmaceutical Association in Newark yesterday H. P. Reynolds of this city paid a tribute to the past presidents of the organization. R. J. Shaw responded to the toast of "Our Partners, the Ladies", and from this delicate subject wove a line of remarks that were original and interesting. Mr. Reynolds was on the committee which presented a code of ethics of the relations of physicians to pharmacists, of pharmacists to physicians and of both to the public.

Been Seeing the Sights.

After an absence of eight months Harry McCormick, motorman on the street railway, has returned to Plainfield. Since he was here he has traveled through New Mexico and made a long visit with his uncle, Thomas Nevins, at his palatial residence in Ireland.

Harry says that he enjoyed the trip very much and expects to take a like one again at some future time. He is now running a car on the Somerset street branch.

The Strollers Coming.

"The Strollers", an amateur dramatic club of New York will present two plays in the Casino, Tuesday evening, June 4. They will give "The Mother-in-law" followed by a one-act farce entitled "Raspberry Shrub Sec."

GRAND JURY FINISHED.

Found 38 Indictments—Foreman Murray Presented With a Cane.

The Grand Jury rose last Friday and presented 38 bills of indictment to the Court. The time set for pleading to the charges was Saturday morning. The members of the jury presented Foreman John W. Murray of this city with a valuable gold-headed cane as a testimonial of their respect for him and for his efficient and faithful services during the time they have been in session. This was the first jury that Mr. Murray ever served on, and the action of his fellow members was a complete surprise to him.

Before dispersing they visited and inspected the county jail, where they found things in perfect order.

ST. JOSEPH'S FESTIVAL.

The Rosary Society Conducting a Pleasant Affair.

The Rosary Society of St. Joseph's R. C. Church conducted a highly pleasing festival and dance in Saenger Hall on Somerset street last evening.

A very large number of the members with their friends were present and thoroughly enjoyed the affair.

Artistic bands gave the hall an attractive appearance. In one corner was a large booth arranged with flowers and greens, where Mrs. Carney, Miss Barbara Conolly and Mrs. Neely looked after those seeking refreshing temperance drinks, and they had no trouble in disposing of their goods.

At another end of the room Mrs. Andrew Kenney, Mrs. David Kenney and Mrs. Shotwell presided over the cake and ice-cream table.

There was an excellent demand for the articles on sale and a nice sum was realized.

James Daly as floor manager was excellent one. Music was furnished by Eugene O'Reilly.

The festival will be continued this evening.

LINDEN ENJOINS ROSELLE.

Work on the Sewer Stops Till the Court Makes a Decision.

A temporary injunction has been obtained by the people of Linden Township, in the Court of Chancery, against the construction of a big trunk sewer by the borough of Roselle through Linden township to tidewater. The authorities of the borough began the work without obtaining permission from the Linden Township Committee.

Township Attorney Clarence Ward therefore applied for the injunction. The issue will be decided next Tuesday by Vice-Chancellor Emery in Newark.

The inhabitants of Roselle wanted the sewer built, but those in the other part of the township did not, as they felt it would increase their taxes and only benefit Roselle. They opposed it so strongly that Roselle formed itself into a borough.

BE OUT AND OUT.

That Is the Kind of a Christian Miss Costello Likes to See.

The members of the Plainfield branch of the Young Ladies Christian League and their friends who met yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. James Middleditch, Park avenue and East Ninth street, had the pleasure of listening to an informal talk from Miss Costello of the New York branch. She spoke of the wise and foolish virgins, and urged her hearers to be sure that they were among the wise—among the out-and-out Christians, who are using this earthly life to do their Father's will and who will be ready to joyfully greet the Bridegroom when she shall return.

The Young Ladies Christian League is a purely religious organization, having for its object the deepening of spiritual life among its members. Though Plainfield already has so many organizations, there is surely room for this new and helpful one.

Borden-Yates Nuptials.

Cards are out for the approaching marriage of Miss Kathryn Young Yates daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Yates to Harry Voorhees Borden. The ceremony will take place in the Crescent Avenue Church, Wednesday afternoon at 5, June 5. A reception will be held at the bride's home, 128 East Seventh street at 5:30.

To Make a Handsome Street.

Surveyors were busily engaged yesterday in staking out Belvidere avenue and marking the grade from Woodland to South avenues. This will make a handsome street, when flagged its whole length, as the residences along that thoroughfare are among the finest in Netherwood.

More Bridge Improvements.

The Somerset County Board of Freeholders, of which L. E. Barkalew and Andrew Lutkins are members for the North Plainfield borough and township, met at Bound Brook yesterday afternoon and agreed to widen the wooden bridge at Mountain avenue from its present width of 28 feet to 56 feet.

IN ANDERSONVILLE.

"Down in the cemetery where are buried the prisoners who died in Andersonville," said Representative Tarsney, of Missouri, "you will find my headstone and my grave:

"'John Tarsney,
8th M.V. I.'

"The M. V. I. stands for Michigan Volunteer Infantry.

"How did it befall that my grave and headstone were dug and reared, my funeral held, and I still live to tell of it? The story is simple enough when one hears it.

"I was a prisoner at Andersonville, and being young and strong when I arrived, and of presumably good character was put on the prisoners' police force. Just before I came, there had been robberies and murders among the prisoners; certain strong ruffians and men of criminal bent preying upon their weak and helpless comrades. The prisoners held a meeting and organized a court and a constabulary; and after that any villain found robbing and murdering was hauled up, tried and executed.

"Well, I was on the police. One morning it was announced that an exchange of prisoners had been agreed to, and doctors came among our various companies to select those who were sick and likely to die, for the purpose of the exchange. The reason for selecting the sick and dying was two fold; it was humanity for one thing, and then the next the Confederates were cunning enough not to send back a well, strong man who could go into a fight at the front the day following his return to his regiment.

"The men they selected for exchange were too far gone with emaciation and sickness to ever aim a gun or fix a bayonet in war again, and it was an advantage to the confederates to be rid of them. It took just so much more off their hands.

"While my thoughts were running on the exchange then being arranged for, I had occasion to go down toward a little stream which ran through the lines. I heard a groan off to one side. It was early in the morning, hardly light, indeed. There, under some trees, lying on a blanket was a soldier in almost his last gasps. I asked him what I could do for him. He said there was nothing to do. I rustled about and built a fire and managed to get enough coffee to make a few spoonfuls. I thought it might brace him up. Then I sat down and had a talk with him. He said he was John France, and, like myself, of a Michigan regiment.

"He told me, too, that he had been selected for exchange.

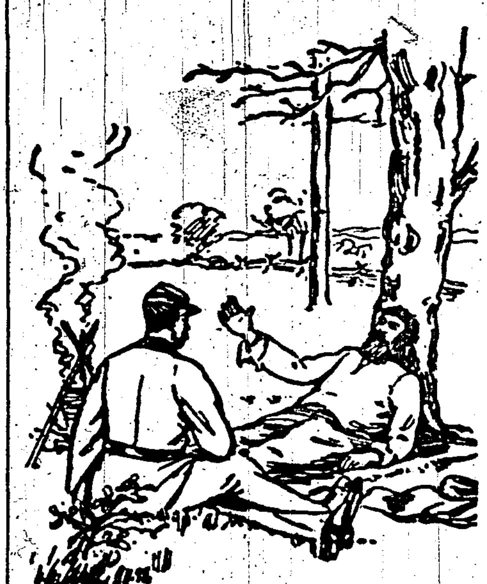
"'But it comes too late,' he added, 'I shan't live an hour.'

"It was he who suggested the plot.

"'After I am dead,' he went on, 'you pin a paper with your name and regiment on my coat. Take my name and number yourself and be exchanged in my place. You'll have to see the sergeant of my 100 and fix it with him. If he objects, bribe him with all you've got, if necessary, not to peach and tell who you are. You can fix him and get out in my name.'

"At first the idea didn't strike me favorably. I doubted success. And I wasn't at all sure just what form rebel resentment might take if they detected me escaping under the alias of a man dead and gone. But John France urged me to go.

"'You might better risk my chance,' he said. 'If you stay you will go down, down until you are as you see me here,' and he held up hands which were like claws.



"AFTER I AM DEAD."

"I half assented. The appearance of John France was convincing. I would have gone through a storm of lead to escape his starved fate. He went on and told me all of the incidents of his capture, the date and the battle, with other data, so that I might stand any cross-examination that might be made as to my identity.

"After a bit I left John France, as I had other duties to attend to. I fixed him up as comfortably as I could and promised to come back as soon as I had liberty to see how he was getting along.

"When I returned in half an hour John France was dead.

"My first business was to hunt up the sergeant of John France's 100. I found him a bull headed, sullen sort of fellow. He bluntly refused in a butt end sort of way to permit me to escape in France's place. As he had to muster and march the prisoners marked for exchange to the place of departure, it was necessary to gain this man's aid.

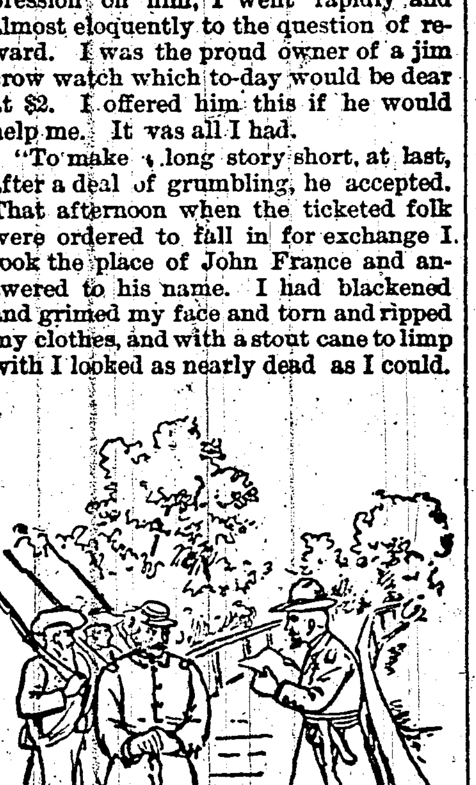
"'You can't go,' he said roughly. 'If France is dead then I'll send some other man from my 100 in his stead. I'd go myself, but being a sergeant queers it. They'd spot me at once, and there would be no one to muster the men. But you can't have the place.' Here the sergeant assumed a determined air, as if he had settled the business. I was boiling.

"I had grown fairly frantic to get away, and the more I dwelt on the scheme to escape and reflected how few and far between were the opportunities of escape, I felt like throttling this obdurate sergeant. But I controlled my wrath as well as I could.

"It will be me or nobody who takes John France's place," I retorted. "He gave me his place himself and I will get it, or it will go wanting a candidate. Since you tell me I shall not go, I tell you that neither shall you nor any man of your hundred." And in bitter emphasis I shook my fist under the sergeant's nose.

"Observing that I had made an impression on him, I went rapidly and almost eloquently to the question of reward. I was the proud owner of a jim crow watch which to-day would be dear at $2. I offered him this if he would help me. It was all I had.

"To make a long story short, at last, after a deal of grumbling, he accepted. That afternoon when the ticketed folk were ordered to fall in for exchange I took the place of John France and answered to his name. I had blackened and grimed my face and torn and ripped my clothes, and with a stout cane to limp with I looked as nearly dead as I could.



"WHAT'S YOUR NAME, SIR?"

We hobbled and tottered rather than marched to the spot where we were to be turned over to a guard who would take us to Savannah. There was a little stream at this place with a narrow foot bridge. One by one our names were called, and as fast as identified we were passed across the bridge to the guard on the other side. At last the officer with the list called out:

"'John France!'

"'Here!' I groaned and hobbled forward with my cane.

"The officer surveyed me sharply. There was a thirty-second pause.

"This sort of thing hadn't occurred before, and my heart began to hammer my ribs like the throbbing of an engine; I was sure I was detected; and that the next thing would be a firing squad, a cracking of musketry, and the fictitious John Tarsney would be as dead as the real, lying stark in the little clump of bushes which I could see from where we stood.

"'What's your name, sir?' at last demanded the officer, still eyeing me like a hawk.

"'John France!' I replied. I had resolved to brave it through.

"'What was your regiment and company?'

"'Company I, 27th Michigan.'

"'Where were you captured?'

"'Battle of Manassas,' I answered. I knew that was the name the rebels bestowed upon the battle of Bull Run, where France was captured.

"The officer still glared at me suspiciously and called the sergeant of my 100. I watched them anxiously while they whispered. But the Waterbury did its work well for once. The sergeant stood firmly by me. At last the officer turned to me again.

"'You may cross the bridge,' he said. 'March!'

"It was as if a stone had been rolled from my heart. With light breast I crossed over to the right side of the little stream. The next day we were sent per freight cars to Savannah, where the exchange was consummated, a United States transport being allowed to enter the port for that purpose.

"One of the queer matters of the exchange was the fact that the officer who had charge for the Confederates was Hon. William H. Hatch, of Missouri, with whom I have served six years in the House of Representatives. Hatch was a Confederate colonel at that time and I recall him as a very soldierly personage indeed.

"I little thought as I passed under Hatch's eye, that day we exchanged prisoners in Savannah, that one day I should cast my vote for him as Speaker of the House of Representatives. But this country is full of surprises of that sort.

"Well," concluded Representative Tarsney, "that's the end of the story, and that's how I escaped, and why poor John France, with my name on his headboard, sleeps in my grave at Andersonville."

A MONUMENT TO KEY.

First Speech of the Silver Tongued Orator at Faneuil Hall.

Unhonored by his countrymen, beneath the soil of his native country in the cemetery of Frederick City, Md., have lain for many years the ashes of Francis Scott Key, whose hymn, "The Star Spangled Banner," has been the inspiration for thousands of heroic deeds. At last a movement is on foot to erect a suitable monument to his memory.

The Key Monument association of Frederick have asked the children of America, on Flag Day, June 14, to make this subject a part of their patriotic exercises. The Governor of Maryland has sent an official endorsement and appeal to all the other governors. The association desires to secure $100,000 for this purpose.

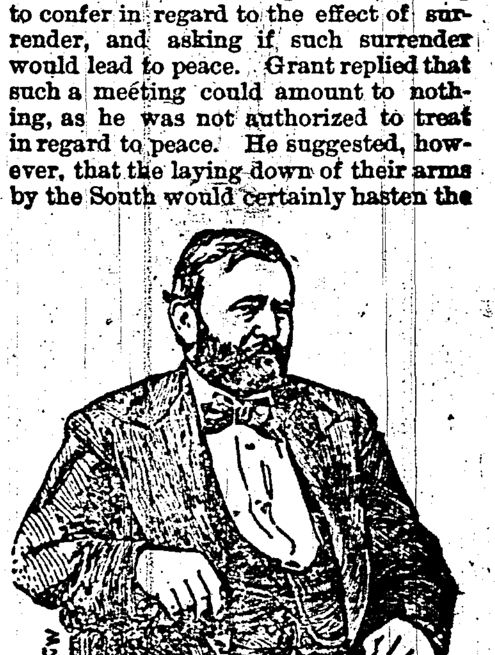
THE SURRENDER OF LEE.

Grant, in a Blouse and Without Arms, Received the Stately Southerner.

General Grant had a most peculiar temperament. In common and ordinary matters he always found it hard to interest himself. If it had not been for the war of the rebellion and the tremendous responsibilities that were thrown upon him he would doubtless have remained the obscurest man in the little town of Galena. As it was, when the name of Grant began to be talked about so much at the front there were many people in the town who were utterly unable to place him. They remembered that there was a person by that name who had modestly clerked in the tannery office and that was all. "Which Grant is it?" was the common question.

Most of the descriptions of the surrender of Lee at Appomattox that have been written, except that in Grant's memoirs, have had more or less of fiction mixed with them. At no time in General Grant's career did his wonderful common sense stand him in better stead than in the hour of victory. He always had such a direct way of arriving at the real thing to do, and, while he was very exacting of an enemy in the essentials, he was exceedingly liberal and considerate in small and non-essential particulars. To those who understood the situation it was apparent on the eighth day of April, 1865, that the surrender of Lee must come soon. Yet few were prepared to prophesy that it would come on the next day. That day Lee's command was approaching Appomatox, to find itself practically in a pocket. Union forces were in large numbers on both sides of the river. At midnight General Grant received a note from General Lee asking for a meeting to confer in regard to the effect of surrender, and asking if such surrender would lead to peace. Grant replied that such a meeting could amount to nothing, as he was not authorized to treat in regard to peace. He suggested, however, that the laying down of their arms by the South would certainly hasten the event and save thousands of lives and hundreds of millions of property. He pointed out the hopelessness of further resistance. On the morning of the 9th Lee made an attack on the Union cavalry, but finding that they were supported strongly by infantry, he sent a flag of truce and forwarded a note to Grant, asking an interview, in accordance with his note of the day before. General Grant was on the road near Appomattox Court House. He replied that he would move forward and meet Lee at any place he might designate.



GENERAL ULYSSES S. GRANT.
(From His Favorite Photograph.)

On the afternoon of the 9th the two generals and their staffs met at the famous McLean house at Appomattox. How plainly I recall that picture! The Confederate general Lee and his staff were in full uniform, with their swords at their sides. Grant was the most unostentatious appearing individual in the company. He did not have on the uniform of his rank, even; but he proceeded to prepare the document which, when signed, would practically end the war. It took about three hours to do all the business. The Confederates evidently expected that they would be called upon to deliver up their swords and side arms. General Grant had been very sick the night before, and that morning, with sick headache, but when he was informed that Lee would surrender he was immediately cured. The room where the negotiations went forward, and where the papers were prepared and signed was very plainly furnished and contained simply a table and some chairs. The surrender consisted, as everybody knows, of an exchange of letters. General Grant wrote a letter in duplicate addressed to General Lee and when it was finished handed it to him. General Lee slowly put on his spectacles and read it. He then proceeded to write a note addressed to General Grant, acknowledging the receipt of his letter and accepting the terms mentioned therein. During the progress of the negotiations, which lasted, as stated above, about three hours, there was a running conversation, often drifting far away from the subject in hand.

When the letters had been exchanged, which made the surrender complete, a general handshaking and introduction took place. The Union officers were presented to General Lee, and the Confederate officers to General Grant. Grant was not elated or excited in the least over the surrender. As he rode to his camp he heard the firing of salutes in celebration of the surrender. He sent immediately, ordering that it be stopped. The picture of that surrender scene has never been made yet. All who have attempted it have filled it with fictions. The contrast between the Confederate vanquished and the Union victors was very marked. General Grant wore his Union soldier's blouse and did not even have his sword. The Confederates were as clean and stylish as though on dress parade, with their full uniforms and arms. The unostentatious, natural, common sense way in which Grant got at this important business will always live as one of the most picturesque as well as remarkable events in history.

DECORATION DAY

IT'S lonesome, sort o' lonesome
It's a Sund'y day to me,
It 'pears like, mor'n any day I nearly ever see.
Yit with the stars and stripes above a-flutterin in the air
On ev'ry soldier's grave, I'd love to lay a lily thare.

They say, though, Decoration days is ginerly observed
'Most everywhares—espeshally by soldier boys that's served—
But me and mother's never went—we seldom git away.
In p'int o' fact, we're allus home on Decoration day.

A-follerin the old war tunes they're playin on the band,
And citizens all jinin in and little children too—

With roses, roses, roses—ev'rybody in the town
Oh, don't the boys know it from theyr camp acrost the hill?
Don't they see theyr com'ardes comin and the old flag wavin still?

Oh, can't they hear the bugul and the rattle of the drum?
Ain't they no way under heavens they can rickollect us some?
Ain't they no way we can coax 'em through the roses jest to say
They know that ev'ry day on earth's theyr Decoration day?

We've tried that, me and mother, whar Elias takes his rest
In the orchard in his uniform and hands acrost his brest,
And the flag he died fer smilin and a-ripplin in the breeze
Above his grave and over that the robin in the trees.

And yit it's lonesome, lonesome. It's a Sund'y day to me,
It 'pears like, mor'n any day I nearly ever see
Still with the stars and stripes above a-flutter in in the air

VON GRIFF'S SURRENDER.

BY SEWELL FORD.

[Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

All who knew Von Griff, the baker, knew him to be a proud man. Perhaps his pride was so well known because he did not hide it. But concealment was something too subtle for the warm hearted, impetuous German. His likes and his dislikes were as easy to read as the big blue sign above his bakery door. Some there were among his customers whom he treated with open scorn. Yet they were not driven away, for Von Griff's bread was good.

There were several things of which Von Griff was proud, but his ever increasing bank account was not one of them.

Von Griff had a daughter. Rosie was her name. He loved Rosie, and he was proud of her. Von Griff also had a sword. It is not too much to say that he loved his sword, and it is but stating the bare fact to say that he was intensely proud of it.

A picture of Von Griff's heart would have revealed two shrines. In one shrine would have been seen his daughter—in the other his sword.

None questioned him his pride in Rosie. There were those, however, who ridiculed his pride in his sword and scoffed at his love for it. The ridiculing and the scoffing took place apart from the presence of Von Griff.

The sword was a huge, wicked looking blade of steel in a brass bound, battered scabbard. It hung by day over the little desk at the end of the bakery counter. At night it was suspended on the wall of Von Griff's chamber and was the first object on which his eyes rested when he woke, as it was the last on which they closed when he lay down to sleep.

All who were friends of his knew the story of that sword, and had admired it. His particular friends had even been allowed to draw the huge blade. This assured them that they stood high in Von Griff's esteem. To these he told stories of his war spent youth, pointed to the white line which started just above his right temple and was lost in the grizzled hair on top of his head, and, with flashing eye and nostrils once more a-quiver, spoke of the field of Sedan, where a French saber had left that mark.

And so it was that many knew the story of that sword. To strangers was pointed out the baker who, as a German soldier, had once met face to face a giant of the terrible Old Guard of Napoleon in deadly conflict and left him with his skull cleft in twain by a single stroke of that big sword. Doubters were shown the very sword and silenced.

"YOU—YOU—YOU VANT TO MARRY MINE ROSIE!"

When Von Griff left the fatherland, his sword was the greater part of his property. True, there was a tin trunk, and his good wife carried a few precious thalers which the passage money had not absorbed. He had not so much pride in the sword then. But as he prospered in the new land his pride grew, and he fixed it on the cherished blade, and when Rosie grew into a bright eyed, pink cheeked, fluffy haired beauty, she, too, shared in his pride. The hard-working mother had died just as the industry of himself and her husband began to bring [illegible] reward.

Von Griff's pride, as has been hinted, was not a purse born pride. Even after he owned two large tenements and two cottages he still lived over his store and wore the same gray clothes.

Simple were the habits of Von Griff. He loved to sit, on summer evenings, under the bakery awning, pipe in hand, and gossip with his neighbors. Sometimes he read—always of wars.

It happened that he was thus occupied one evening when Rosie, with sparkling eyes and flushed cheeks, came into the sitting room. He held a magazine in one hand and his long pipe in the other.

"Oh, Rosie, mine dear, come here. I vos reading somedings here, and I like you to finish id for me. Eh? That's a good girl."

"All right, papa, after I've"—

"Now, Rosie, now. Let dot vait und read me."

So Rosie, who was a good girl, proceeded to read. It was a story of Gettysburg's fierce fight. The tale was little to Rosie's liking, but she did not hesitate. As she read on and the story pictured that fearful three days' struggle on the hill tops, the warlike baker's blood was stirred. As the story detailed the slaughter in the bloody angle and in the wheatfield, and how Little Round Top was lost and captured again, his eyes flashed with excitement. But it was when the writer told of how, for hour after hour, the troops of both armies lay, face to the ground, while above them flew the iron storm from the opposing batteries, that he was stirred most. Von Griff told himself that not even on the historic field of Austerlitz was there such an awful cannonading. The description of the roar that seemed to shake the earth and sky as well reached him with full force. Had he not known the same terror himself? Heartily he agreed with the writer that the men who stood their ground there and waited during that duel of iron throated monsters until their turn came were indeed brave men and heroes.

"Rosie, dot vos grand, grand, grand!" he exclaimed when she had finished.

"Yes, I know, papa. But now I want you to listen to me. There's some one in the parlor who's coming in to say something to you, and I want you to be real nice to him."

Then she gave her father a kiss and a hug and tripped into the next room.

"Vot is dot you say, Rosie?"

Von Griff could not change the current of his thought so quickly, and Rosie's words were all but lost upon him.

On his mind was still pictured the field of Gettysburg when a young man came in from the parlor.

"Ah, dot vos grand, grand! Heroes dey were, heroes. Yes, und—vell, vell!"

He had realized that some one was present.

"Ah, Meester Fairfieldt. Vell, vot is id now? Vant to dake Rosie to some more dances, eh? My chracious, but you boys vill turn mine hair vite. Always vanting mine Rosie to go somevere."

"Mr von Griff," said Jack Fairfield, "I want to ask you something more serious than that this time."

"Vell, vell, oudt with it," said the unsuspecting baker.

"I want—sir, I—I"—

Jack hesitated in spite of himself while he groped for the carefully prepared speech. But it was gone. He could not remember a word of it, and there he was standing stammering like a schoolboy with a half learned lesson.

"Vell, vell," said Von Griff impatiently.

Jack made a last effort to recall that elusive speech and then blurted out, "I want Rosie, Mr. von Griff, for my wife."

"Vat?"

The word seemed to be the result of an internal explosion. The baker had leaned forward in his chair in an effort to rise quickly to his feet, but had failed. All this had added to the lurid color of his face and deducted from his lung power. He made another effort to rise and succeeded.

"Vat!" he exploded again. "You—you—you vant to—to marry mine Rosie!"

"Yes, sir," said Jack, half wondering whether the [illegible] was really going to explode or [illegible]. "She is willing, for I [illegible] her, and I came to get your consent."

"You—you did, eh? Hah! My consent! Vell, sir, you vill nefer get it—nefer. Vat, mine Rosie marry a jackanapes of a nobody! Mine Rosie!"—

"But, I'm somebody to Rosie," put in Jack, thinking a little argument might be a relief.

"To Rosie, eh? Hah! But vat are you? Who are you? Answer me dot. Who is your father?"

"You know my father, Mr. von Griff."

"Yes, I know him. He iss another nobody—a nobody, I dell you. Leaf mine house und nefer come here some more. Go avay quick!"

There seemed to be nothing for Jack to do but go. It was very plain that the baker was in no mood for argument, and, much as Jack wished to retort to the statement that he and his father were nobodies, he turned on his heel without a word and left the house.

Jack did not understand the cause of Von Griff's wrath. He looked upon it merely as the temporary ruffling of an old man's temper that a day would smooth out. But Rosie knew better. She fully comprehended the contempt in which her father held those whom he thought were of common clay and far outside the nobility of arms which he had constructed for himself. She knew that his pet project was to take her back to Germany and buy for her an army husband—a creature with waxed mustache, high boots, a clanking sword, and epaulets. She realized that her father's money would attract many such and that the giving of her hand in marriage would be only a question of how high a rank the fortune of the rich baker would bring. Rosie did not propose to be made a factor in any such bargain. How to escape it though, she did not know.

Von Griff, after a troubled night, began the day in a passion which was felt by every one within reach of his voice. At last he could contain himself no longer. Putting his broad brimmed brown hat solidly on his head, he started out to find Jack's father.

Now John Fairfield was as quiet and inoffensive as the baker was irascible and pugnacious. As a humble tinsmith, he worked steadily in his little [illegible] day after day, attracting no attention. He was retiring and slow spoken. He seemed to fill a chink in the social scheme—a chink in an out of the way corner. Yet he was not a morose man. He was something of a philosopher in his quiet way, and a cheerful sort of philosophy was his too.

When Von Griff stormed into the tin shop, Fairfield was giving a teakettle a new lease of life by the judicious application of solder.

"Meester Fairfieldt, you haf a son, haf you not?" abruptly began the baker.

"I have," said the tinsmith, suspending operations on the teakettle.

"Und I have a daughter," went on Von Griff. "Your son, Meester Fairfieldt, has asked me for mine Rosie to marry."

"Ah?" said the tinsmith, with a smile.

"Hah, yah!" exploded the baker. "For mine Rosie to marry. Meester Fairfieldt, your son is young. He knows noddings yet. He knows not dot he is a nobodies. See vat he does! He vants to marry the daughter of a Von Griff. Hah!"

The tinsmith smiled placidly at this tirade and put his iron in the blazing charcoal.

"A Von Griff," continued the baker, throwing out his chest and striking it with his clinched fist.

"Meester Fairfieldt, I vos a soldtier, und I fights me at Sedan und Metz. Who vos you?"

The tinsmith smiled and took up the teakettle. Turning his back on the baker, he held the kettle to the light and began a search for unwelcome holes. But the baker had not finished.

"Who vos you?" he repeated.

As the tinker did not answer, Von Griff replied to his own question.

"You—you vos—a—dinker—a tam dinker. Und tink you mine Rosie efer marry the son of a dinker? No, py chracious, never! Meester Fairfieldt, your son petter keep away from mine house. I haf spoken, und I am a man of my vort."

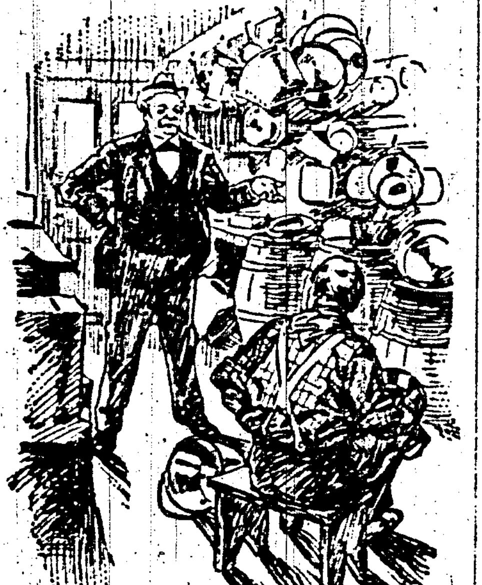
"Well, I guess Jack can take care of himself," remarked the tinsmith quietly.



"MEESTER FAIRFIELDT," BEGAN THE BAKER.

With many a chuckle Jack's father told him of the baker's visit, and added, "The next time you go courting Rosie Von Griff, you'd better wear a suit of chain armor, my boy."

But Rosie would not let Jack run any such risks. She made him promise not to go near her father until she should give him permission to do so, and to repay him she planned many ingenious meetings. So the courtship went merrily on in spite of Von Griff and his big sword.

May had almost gone and spring was fairly installed in winter's place when one day Rosie met Jack with reddened eyes and serious face.

"Why, Rosie, what's the matter? You've been crying."

"I know I have, and I'm going to make you cry, too," she said dolefully.

"Oh, now don't! Just think, wouldn't I look nice weeping?"

"Now, Jack Fairfield, you just stop making fun of me and listen. Something dreadful's going to happen."

"Well, what is it?"

"My papa is going—going—oh, Jack—he's going to take me to Germany and marry me off to an old army officer. There—how do you like that?"

"But he's not going to do anything of the kind."

"Yes, he is. We're to start in June."

"Then we'll be married tomorrow. I'd like to see him take you off to Germany then."

"Oh, Jack, I wouldn't dare do that. He would—oh, he would kill you! I shudder every time I see him handle his big sword now!"

"Nonsense, Rosie. He would do nothing of the sort. He might lose his breath and say things, but folks are not carved up nowadays by their fathers-in-law. Don't you worry."

Rosie insisted, though, that she would worry, but she admitted afterward that her father had not definitely decided when they should start, and that nothing had been said concerning the army officer.

A few days later Jack saw Von Griff, and he was tempted to go to him then, and tell him that he knew all about his plan to take Rosie off to Germany. The baker was standing out in the street before his store directing the work of two of his assistants who were tacking festoons of red, white and blue bunting on the awning. It was the afternoon of the day before Memorial day, and it was in honor of this that the patriotic baker was decorating.

But Jack saw Rosie looking from an upper window, and he contented himself with slyly throwing a kiss in her direction. Rosie hid herself from the view of her father below and threw one back.

When the parade of the veterans passed down the main street of the village the next day, Von Griff's bakery was resplendent with the national colors. What was lacking in taste was made up in lavishness. Flags little and flags big were tacked in rows across the front of the building. The awning posts were swathed in red, white and blue cambric, and there was a big red lettered motto painted on cotton cloth, which read:

"HONOR TO THE HEROES."

Von Griff, the author of all this display, stood under the awning looking happy, and beaming with suppressed enthusiasm.

With a martial roll of drums the parade came down the street. First came the grand marshal on a prancing big gray horse. Then came the local officials, in two open barouches, next the band, and behind, marching with heads erect and in as good time as rheumatism and age stiffened limbs would allow, came the veterans; some in full Grand Army uniform, with white crossed belts over blue suits and brass tipped helmets, and some with only the black slouched hat, ornamented with wreath inclosed post number and the cord and tassel, to denote that they were of those who had fought side by side with those whose graves they had just decorated.

The marshal of the day noticed Von Griff's patriotic display and determined to reward the spirit in which it had been made.

Reining in his gray steed, he wheeled and gave the order to halt. Then bringing the veterans to a company front up and down the street he roared as he waved his sword:

"Com-pan-ee, attention! Sa-a-a-a-alo-o oot!"

As each veteran swung his right hand up, palm outward, to his hat brim Von Griff, heart swelling and eyes dimmed, drew himself up to the most stiffly martial attitude which his corpulency would allow and returned the salute.

As the veterans again formed into fours and began to march on, Von Griff's gaze fell on a man in veteran's uniform marching modestly in one of the rear ranks. It was John Fairfield.

On the day following the parade the tinsmith was hard at work in his shop when in walked Von Griff.

"Meester Fairfieldt," began the baker, with his usual abruptness, "I am von idiot, und you are von hero. I came here to ask of you your pardons."

"Oh, that's all right," said Fairfield, with a laugh at the baker's earnestness and humility.

"Vill you shake mine handt?"

"Why, of course."

With due formality and solemnity the handshaking was accomplished. But the baker had not finished.

"Meester Fairfieldt," he continued, "yesterday I learn dot you vos a hero. Today I find dot you are also von gentlemans."

"Well, I never considered myself a hero, Mr. von Griff, but I thank you for the latter expression of your esteem," replied Fairfield, still with an amused expression on his face.

"But you are von hero," persisted the baker warmly. "Dey tell me how you fought at Gettysburg. Dot iss enough. Meester Fairfieldt, I vos a soldtier mineself, und I fight at Sedan, but I never fought in von grandt, von terrible struggle like you haf, und vonce more, Meester Fairfieldt, I salute you as von hero. As for your son, I vant you to say to him dot he iss as welcome in mine house as in his own, und dot when he iss ready vonce more to ask me somedings vich he vonce alretty does I vill be pleased to hear him."

ABOUT PLAINFIELD.

What the New Jersey Contractor Says of This City.

The following very flattering article on the advantages of Plainfield as a business and residential place appeared in the New Jersey Contractor of last Saturday.

This city has the distinction of being the third in importance in the suburban district and is exceeded in population by Newark and Elizabeth only. The last census gives it 18,000. As well as enjoying the honor of being the most beautiful city in the State, Plainfield is among the few habitations that existed before the Revolutionary war, for it is on record that the first frame building was erected in 1735. It was from a high elevation on the neighboring mountain that General Washington used to look over the valley and observe the operations of the British army under General Howe. This spot is beautifully situated on the north side of a picturesque niche in the bold mountain, and has been marked by a tall white shaft that is easily discernible from passing trains.

About 100 years ago the population reached the century mark. A gain in population of over 3,000 is what the city has shown in five years, which speaks well for its attractiveness.

The city is established on a broad plateau, level as a floor, and a finer location could not have been chosen in which to develop a beautiful place of residence. The streets are wide and macadamized and the sidewalks are nearly all flagged. A drive about the city is like an outing in some park. The palatial residences, that are so numerous as to almost make the stranger marvel at the amount of wealth invested, are located back from the streets in the midst of green lawns, shrubbery and flowers, and no two are alike in their architectural designs.

Along the curbs great rows of grand old shade trees throw their welcome shadows o'er the highways in Summer. The city has electric light, gas and water. The important feature of sewerage was under discussion previous to 1894, and in that year a system was begun that will extend throughout the city.

As to the water it may be said that a subterranean river underlies the city that is as mysterious as it is wonderful and beneficial. It imparts a moisture through the gravelly soil that furnishes a never-failing supply to those using the artesian well system. It is from this silent river that the sparkling Netherwood water is drawn, and it has never failed, even during the most severe droughts.

The citizens of Plainfield are, for the most part, from the large cities, and are on the alert for everything that savors of city comforts and conveniences. The local government consists of a mayor and common council chosen from the best citizens by election. There is not a dark spot on the record of any official that has thus far served the community, and the financial standing of the city is assured.

And Plainfield is a well-known sanitarium. The Blue Ridge mountain range on the north shields it from the piercing winds of Winter, while the historic Short Hills on the east protect it from the salt air of the ocean. The air is so modified by these natural barriers that persons affected with throat and lung troubles get instant relief. The general healthfulness of the city at all seasons is undisputed.

The amount of business transacted has justified the organization of a Board of Trade. Stores of all kinds furnish all necessary articles for household use. A few of these stores are among the largest in the State.

Plainfield's public schools are of the best. She has also several private schools of sufficient reputation to attract pupils from all parts of the United States. Churches of all denominations, some of them extremely costly and novel in their style of architecture, are located at various parts of the city, and the divines presiding take high rank in their profession.

Socially the city has many resources, including several musical organizations, and an amateur dramatic club, which has included in its membership many well-known society women.

The commuters are furnished an excellent train service, included in which are club cars, given exclusively to commuters' clubs for friendly intercourse, card playing, etc. Between 30 and 40 trains per day stop here each way. Some of them run to New York in 45 minutes.

COLLEGE PRANKS.

A High School Graduate Made to Do Funny Things.

A recent pupil of the Plainfield High School, now at college in Boston, was the subject of the following playful notice the other day in The Herald of that city:

"W. E. C. Leonard of Boston University freshman class became a member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity last evening.

"The form of initiation adopted by the Betas was, to say the least, unique, and of much interest to the public. Mr. Leonard is one of the college poets, and his verses have appeared at times in the University Beacon and much interest has been centered in his work. During the prize contest for the best articles in The Beacon Mr. Leonard carried off the greatest number of honors.

"Yesterday, as part of the initiation exercises, the poet was ordered to paste all effusions on an empty water pail, inside and out, and what remained of them on a piece of heavy cardboard. The pail he carried and the pasteboard was slung about his neck, and, with trousers turned up, Mr. Leonard paraded the streets until called into college, where he was compelled to cut up all manner of 'shines', for the benefit of the fair sex. On his way back to the clubhouse his jacket was turned wrong side out.

"During the evening Mr. Leonard was again taken in tow and placed in a conspicuous spot on Bowdoin street, where a tin pail was placed in his lap, a pair of blue goggles on his eyes and a placard stating that he was totally blind. The generosity of the public was shown in more ways than one, and the victim feels that begging is a lucrative business.

"After experiencing much more of a mysterious nature Mr. Leonard became a full-fledged Beta."

Knights Templar Asylum.

A correspondent in the Elizabeth Daily Journal of Friday, wrote as follows of the trip of St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar, to Plainfield Thursday night:

WOMEN NEED TO VOTE.

And the World Needs It, Too, Says Dr. Lewis.

REASONS FOR SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

Enthusiastic Meeting of Those Who Want to See Women Have a Voice in the Management of Schools—Aaron M. Powell, Dean Rodman and Prof. Maxson Speak on the Question.

The question of school suffrage for women has been agitated so much by the women of New Jersey that it seems as though their persistency is going to amount to something more than mere talk, and that before long it will be counted one of their duties to vote at the school elections. In Plainfield the women have not been inactive, but have been quietly at work, both personally and with petitions. Some time ago the Plainfield leaders planned for a public meeting where the voice and sentiment of those interested could be heard on the subject. Saturday night was the time set and a number of men and women met in Assembly Hall of the High School building for the purpose of discussion.

Mrs. David P. Hall, who is the recognized leader of the movement in Plainfield, presided and stated in a concise manner the object of the meeting, giving some valuable hints and suggestions that were well noted by those present. Mrs. Hall then introduced Aaron M. Powell who spoke substantially as follows:

There are many differences of opinion on the subject of woman suffrage, but to my mind they all seem to run in the same channel practically. Women have learned the alphabet and now want more, and it should not be denied them. This question will soon be submitted to our legislators, and then they will be given an opportunity to do something that will be a credit to them. For the second time the Supreme Court of New Jersey has deprived women of the right to vote in full. I want to give this item of testimony: I have been in touch with several localities in the South where women have taken an active part in attempting to gain the ballot in local affairs, and, at times they became grieved and discouraged, yet they were recognized in the end. I have found men who were very decided that women had been helpful in conducting public affairs.

We want the Constitution so amended as to give women the right they ask. God links together opportunity and responsibility, and we should do what we can and do it now. I was very much pleased to note in tonight's Evening Post, the fact that Mayor Strong had recognized the ability of women by appointing one as inspector of the Schools in New York. I hope that before his term of office expires he will put more competent women in the Board of Education.

New Jersey cannot afford to be left behind in the procession, and let us help them all we can. It is not the woman question, but the human question. Men need the help of women, and women the help of men. Dr. Parkhurst asked for woman's help and how grandly they responded.

Dr. Lewis was introduced and gave a few practical thoughts on opportunity and duty. He said in part:

God has settled this question of woman suffrage. We think we are doing something, when in fact it is God's work. Prof. Maxson and his excellent corps of teachers are doing more actual work along these lines than Dean Rodman and all the rest of the ministers together. Our educational system is at stake. I believe the time is coming when we will only have the common school and the actual university, and that all kinds of intermediate places for learning will be cut off and cease to exist. Women need school suffrage, and the world needs it, to promulgate high and lofty ideas. Women should open the door and walk in, embracing the opportunities that belong to them.

David P. Hall told of his experience while district school clerk of Fanwood township. He was very amusing and related graphically the many interesting experiences that he had. He told how it was before and after women were allowed to vote, noting the vast improvement when they were permitted a voice in school matters. While not a full suffragist Mr. Hall thought that school suffrage for women was the best possible thing.

Dean Rodman followed Mr. Hall and he, too, thought that school suffrage for women was a good thing.

The last speaker was Prof. H. M. Maxson, whose remarks indicated that he was heartily in sympathy with the movement. He gave some of his experiences which could be applied to the subject. The following resolution was presented by Isaac W. Miller and adopted:

> Resolved, That it is the sense of the meeting of the citizens of Plainfield, that it is desirable that the school suffrage be extended to women, upon the same terms as it is now exercised by men, and that our representatives in the Senate and Assembly be requested to use all honorable means to place an amendment to the constitution to that effect upon a speedy road to its submission to a vote of the people.

Mrs. D. P. Hall, Mrs. D. W. Pond, D. P. Hall and Dean Rodman were appointed a committee to go to Trenton and present the resolution together with the petition.

Mrs. Hall said that she thought that there would be several thousand names attached to the petitions now in circulation.

BETTER MAIL SERVICE.

Postmaster Hetfield Gets a Direct Pouch for the West and South.

Postmaster Hetfield has at last gained for this city increased mail facilities which it has never heretofore enjoyed, but which, nevertheless, as a post-office of this class, it should undoubtedly have had years ago. Heretofore all mail matter for the west, south and southwest has had to be transferred first to the New York city post-office and there re-worked, naturally entailing considerable loss of time to some very important mail matter. This fact has been very clearly understood by the present postmaster, and at his urgent request Superintendent R. C. Jackson, of the railway mail service, has issued an order for this post-office to pouch on the through fast mail via B. & O. R. R., leaving here at 5:30 p.m. As this train does not stop here it will be necessary to forward the pouch to Bound Brook for connection.

The mails which will be dispatched by this train are for southern, western and southwestern states, with the exception of the extreme northwestern. This mail will leave daily except Sunday, and will close at 4:45 p. m.

W. H. N. Cadmus and wife, of Brooklyn, came to Plainfield on Saturday to spend Sunday at the home of L. E. Cole, of 78 Duer street. During Saturday night Mr. Cadmus was taken ill and early in the morning Dr. Adams was summoned. His illness was the result of an overloaded stomach, coupled with the extreme heat. He wasable to return to his home today.

THE APPEAL DISMISSED.

Exciting Time in Court at Elizabeth.

WATSON CASES WON BY THE CITY.

Deprived of His Witnesses, the Corporation Counsel Springs a Surprise, and Wrests Victory From the Jaws of Defeat in Both Cases—Mayor Gilbert's Act Enforced.

The proceedings in Court at Elizabeth Tuesday morning in the Watson liquor cases were decidedly sensational. Craig A. Marsh, counsel for the city, was informed by the police that the detective on whose testimony the city relied, had failed to attend court although he had been duly subpœnaed. It was supposed that the city would have to throw up the cases. Mr. Marsh said no; that he should move the cases just the same. The police were dumbfounded. How could the city win without evidence? Watson appeared in court with Lawyer John A. Frech of Somerville, and Public Prosecutor Fred C. Marsh, of Elizabeth. Mr. Frech, after the city moved the first case, applied for postponement. After heated argument, the Court refused to postpone. Craig A. Marsh then moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction. He followed the motion with a long argument, the substance of which was as follows:

When Plainfield's charter was amended in 1874, the Legislature enacted that all convictions in the City Court should be reviewed by certiorari to the Circuit Court. That act was declared unconstitutional, and so all persons convicted before the City Court and jury, contrary to the intention of the Legislature, were allowed a new trial before a county jury on appeal. Mayor Gilbert this year directed the Corporation Counsel to draw an act that would be constitutional, and that would restrict the right of review in such cases to review by certiorari to the Supreme Court. This act had been duly passed and was now in full force, and hence Watson's only method of reviewing the two convictions was to take out a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court. The Corporation Counsel said that he would be perfectly frank with the Court, and admit that on first considering the question he had thought that the act would govern future cases only; but upon more mature reflection he conceived it to be his duty to maintain that the act governs these cases as well as any to arise hereafter. He thus presented the arguments pro and con which he said would occur to the judicial mind and concluded by maintaining that the law had a retrospective operation, and was neither ex post facto since it did not relate to crimes, nor did it impair the obligation of any contract nor divest any vested right. It merely touched the remedy. He therefore moved that the appeal be dismissed.

Mr. Frech said that the question was one of the greatest importance, and one which he would like time to look into with his associate, Senator Marsh. He asked for time. Senator Marsh said he was to be in the case if there was a postponement to enable him to examine the case. He had not been spoken to until this morning.

The Court asked the Corporation Counsel if the act was to take effect immediately and he answered that it was. The act was produced and found to be as stated.

The Court thereupon granted the city's motion and dismissed Watson's appeal. The same decision was given in the second case.

The police were delighted and literally hugged the Corporation Counsel for turning what they thought was sure to be a humiliating defeat into a double victory for the city.

McCUTCHEN IS FAST.

Plainfield was well represented at the State meet of the L. A. W. in Trenton, Saturday. "Baron" E. T. Hand of the Crescent Wheelmen won the half-mile State Championship, cleverly nipping Ray Dawson of Boonton at the tape, and William N. McCutchen, riding for the Plainfield Bicycle Club from 120 yards, captured not only his heat of the Class A mile handicap, but also the final, beating a field of big men. The heat was run in 2:11 2-5 which, from 120 yards, is about a 2:19 gait, and the last quarter of the final was 31 seconds, a 2:04 pace. McCutchen certainly promises to equal any rider in the amateur class.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Board of Directors Hold an Important Meeting.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE LIBRARIAN.

Miss E. L. Adams Makes an Interesting Report for the Year, Which Shows That the Library Is Increasing in Influence—13,292 Volumes on Hand.

The regular meeting of the Board of Directors of the Public Library and reading room was held Tuesday. The meeting was called to order at 8:30 o'clock, President Tyler in the chair. Present Directors, M. W. Tyler, J. B. Dumont, Rowland Cox, J. Evarts Tracy, W. H. Larrabee, and W. M. Stillman, were present. The minutes of the meeting of May 7th were read and approved.

It was moved and carried that the Treasurer's annual statement, and statistics furnished by the librarian, and other matters of the annual report be referred to the president and vice-president to make up the annual report of the library for the year ending May 31, 1895.

It was moved and carried that the report of the treasurer on the Babcock houses be received, and his actions thereto approved.

On motion the matter of the adjustment of the insurance policies was referred to the treasurer with power.

The annual report of the librarian was, on motion, referred to the Library Committee.

Miss Adams, in the opening of her report, speaks of the growth and usefulness which the library is attaining. She mentioned a number of gifts of especial value to the patrons of the library. As an evidence of how well the library was appreciated she said that she was constantly called upon to answer questions from all classes and ages. One of the needs of the library was a more complete set of reference books. A valuable factor in making the library efficient was the co-operation with the schools, and to the students a great deal of assistance was given in preparing essays and debates. During the year there had been 39,848 visitors to the building, as against 35,195 last year. There was some complaint about the ventilation of the reading rooms and particularly in the winter months.

With persons who were anxious to keep posted on current events reference books were in great demand. Forty school teachers had applied for cards.

In the home circulation a large increase was noticeable. The number of books added during the year was 965, against 465 last year. Miss Adams too occasion to thank the Daily Press for the open use of its columns to library matters.

The committee having charge of the matter of providing ways and means for housing books, reported an estimate of A. B. & W. J. Westervelt, of New York, to do the work for $3,450.

The treasurer reported the following bills, which, on motion, were ordered paid:

CHURCH STATISTICS.

Final Volume Sent Out Last Saturday.

COMPILED BY PLAINFIELD MEN.

The Work was Done Under the Careful Direction of Dr. H. K. Carroll, Assisted by Charles E. Buell—The Book is a Complete and Competent Church History of the United States.

The final volume of church statistics of the eleventh census of the United States, of 1890, comprising 812 pages, and embellished with colored maps which show at a glance the location of the people of various religious beliefs, was sent out from the office of the Secretary of the Interior, at Washington on Saturday, June 1, 1895.

The work of gathering and compiling the statistics, and preparing the histories of the 145 denominations of the United States, which goes to make up this publication, was done under the direction of Dr. H. K. Carroll, as special agent, and was completed June 30th, 18 3, since which time the volume has been awaiting the preparation of maps to accompany the tables, and has been in the process of printing. The importance of this publication is second to that of the population statistics, and has received the largest comment in both religious and secular papers.

The attempt had been made by each census during fifty years, to gather and publish the statistics of churches; but this is the first time that a success has been achieved. The tables and histories of the several denominations were first published in bulletin form and submitted to the officials, and representative men of each denomination for careful perusal, and, after receiving the full endorsement of these, as being in every way correct, the final volume, which has just been issued, was made ready for publication. The work is exhaustive in its scope, including all religious bodies in the United States, including the territories, and Alaska, that had a form of organization in 1890.

By having the ecclesiastical endorsement the statistics and histories of the denominations represented is received as authentic and reliable, and being taken just a century after the signing of the Constitution which made us a nation, the growth of the church element during that time is furnished as a basis from which to make computations of future growth. The work of gathering and compiling these statistics occupied three years. The expense of procuring the same being less than one-half of one percent. of the entire cost of the entire eleventh census, and not more than the cost of firing the salutes in the naval parade during the Columbian exposition.

The supervision of the details was entrusted to Charles E. Buell, of this city, of whom Dr. Carroll said, in a report on the work made to the Superintendent of Census:—"Charles E. Buell has been my able and faithful co-laborer, superintending the details with skill and efficiency. His experience in the tenth census has made his services invaluable."

Dr. Carroll proved himself to be the right man in the right place, being skilled in the most essential part, the various matters of church organization, and in church history, and especially competent to correspond with the officials of the churches to bring the results sought, and upon which so much depended. The plan for the schedules, involving the questions to be answered by the officials and representative men of all denominations, and upon which success might depend, is due to Hon. Robert P. Porter, Superintendent, and it proved to be the foundation of the success that was achieved.

Too much praise cannot be given for the faithful and efficient work of the clerks in compiling the statistics after they had been collected. Some idea of their faithfulness can be gained from the fact that several of them gave their services to complete the table after they had been dropped from the pay-roll, so interested were they in the success of the publication with which they had been so identified.

The publication just issued is a lasting tabulation that will be used as a book of reference by students of church matters during long years to come, and is a matter of general interest throughout the land. It is published for gratuitous distribution; but can be obtained only through a request from a member of Congress, or a United States Senator, or to the Secretary of the Interior, excepting requests from libraries and newspapers, which may receive attention without the accompanying solicitation of a Member or Senator.

JUNE SCHOOL BUSINESS.

Regular Meeting of the Board of Education.

ROUTINE MATTERS TRANSACTED.

Vertical Penmanship System to Be Extended to All Primary Schools—Irving School Bonds Ordered Paid—Board Grants the Right of Way on East Fifth Street to Street Railway.

The regular June meeting of the Board of Education was held Tuesday evening, all the members being present except Mr. Lounsbury. A small batch of bills was presented and ordered paid.

Prof. H. M. Maxson presented specimens of vertical penmanship from the scholars of the Washington school, which the board were very much pleased with. They decided to extend the system to all primary grades.

Clerk Clark read a communication from the Fourth of July celebration committee, asking that the board appoint a committee to act with them. The board regretted their inability to comply with the request on account of the lateness with which it was received, but expressed themselves as heartily in favor of the project.

Collector Johnson, in a communication, reported $471.79 school money received for May.

A communication from the Mutual Life Insurance Company, giving notice that the $6.25 interest was due on the Irving school bonds, was received, and this, together with the principal, $1,000, was ordered paid.

Clerk Clark was authorized to advertise for bids for furnishing coal to the schoools, and the committee on buildings were empowered to look into the matter of changing the size of the grates in the furnaces with the idea of burning smaller coal, as a matter of economy. They were also instructed to have the furnaces put in condition for next year.

The board instructed the present secretary of the board to sign the petition on behalf of the board, giving the street railway the right of way on East Fifth street back of the Bryant School.

Corporation Counsel C. A. Marsh communicated to the board that it was not necessary to place fire escapes on the school buildings below the second floor, and according to a law passed in 1892 the matter was left with the governing body of the city. Mr. Lovell offered a resolution thanking Mr. Marsh for the several opinions he has rendered to the board. It was adopted unanimously.

Prof. Maxson stated that William Kiss, the truant and unruly scholar, had been taken before the Chief of Police and reprimanded, and that any further disobedience of the school laws would necessitate his being transferred to the Reform School. The secretary reported that the acceptances of all prize committees had been received.

The board decided to pay for the absence of all teachers during the year which was caused by illness.

The meeting then adjourned.

First National Bank Alterations.

Mrs. L. Adams has been notified by the First National Bank officials to vacate the store which she is occupying in their building, by July 1st, at which time the proposed alterations in the bank quarters will probably be commenced. Mrs. Adams is negotiating for the rental of the store next to the City National Bank on the opposite side of the street.

Julia Magruder's New Novel.

Miss Julia Magruder, whose story of "The Princess Sonia," in the Century, is attracting such favorable comment, has given her new novel to The Ladies' Home Journal. It is called "The Violet" and deals with the question of second marriage. C. D. Gibson, the illustrator, is making a series of pictures for the novel.

Anxious to Wear Shoulder Straps.

Several boys from the High School and Leal's School went to Elizabeth to take the examinations for West Point and Annapolis. The examinations were held in Pingry's School.

KNEW THE COLONEL.

I was sojourning in the land of the far Southwest and contentedly loafing, as particularly suits the climate and a second lieutenant, when the office door was opened slowly and a head covered with an old Grand Army hat was thrust in. The eyes of the head peered around from under their ragged eyebrows and took on a look of keen disappointment. The lips moved but made no sound: then the head was withdrawn and the door almost shut. It opened again a very little way, and disclosed part of a blue clad figure some six feet in height.

Then it closed again and opened as before, only somewhat wider. I swung round in my chair and waited to see what would happen. The man came into the room, but kept one hand on the knob, to facilitate his escape, if necessary, it appears.

I held my peace and watched him. He was worse than unkempt; he was, in fact, about as seedy an individual as I have ever seen covered by a Grand Army coat; his eyes were red and his hand shook badly. I suspected at once what the trouble was, knowing the failing of his class.

I let him decide to speak first, however; but he took his time. Reconciling himself to the shutting of the door, and relinquishing his grasp on the knob at last, he took off his hat and sat at the extreme edge of the chair. He studied the window panes intently and chewed his tobacco in a meditative fashion. There were no telling how long this might last, so I faced about to my desk again and began to write.

"I'm busted again," it began.

The announcement evidently called for no expression of surprise. I gave none.

"Yes?" I answered.

"Uh-hu."

I went to my copying again. Five more minutes.

"Where's the Colonel at?"

"He's sick."

"Oh! he is?" This in a tone of a child reading a primer. "What's the matter with 'im?"

"He's got the grippe."

"When's he coming back?"

"In two or three weeks, perhaps."

"Oh, damn!" Quite as you or I might mildly say "pshaw."

The veteran continued to look at the window and chew.

"I wanted to see the Colonel."

"Is there anything that I can do for you?"

"Nope." A resumption of the window and tobacco. "I'm busted again."

"So you said."

"I've been drunk, too."

"Well, you look rather like it."

"Do I?" He examined his hat and hands and boots. "I reckon I do." He smiled genially. "Queer, ain't it, how you most generally can tell."

"Very queer," I agreed.

"Now, I thought I looked pretty good, but I reckon I was off."

"You might be worse." I consoled him. "I've seen them look worse."

"Yes, so've I." His knowledge of the world was evidently as good as mine. The pause was repeated.

"I told you I was busted, didn't I? Well, what in blazes do you suppose I told you for?"

"I really can't say."

"Can't you, really?" I felt that I was the target at which fine, sarcastic arrows were being aimed. "Wasn't you ever busted?"

With a truthfulness far greater than might generally be felt, I replied that I had been, sometimes. Only a second lieutenant like myself can appreciate the honesty of my answer.

"Well, what do you generally want when you're in a hole?"

"Money."

"That's what I want."

The deduction was so logical and obvious that I felt like a child who had been given to reason on some such axiom as "Green apples make boys sick. John ate green apples. John is sick." The old soldier was evidently pleased with the impression he had made. I felt my nerves trembling and fell weakly into the net.

"I suppose you want me to lend you some?"

"Nope, but I want you to give me some."

"Oh, do you? Doesn't it strike you that you are a bit cheeky?"

"Nope. You're going to give me some, ain't you?"

"Well, I really can't see why I should."

"The Colonel does."

I did not doubt it; the Colonel's unusual poverty was ascribed in the regiment to just that sort of thing.

"The Colonel may have some reason for it. Besides, how do I know he does?"

"I say so." The tone was above dispute.

"Very good; but as I said, the Colonel probably has some reason for it. How often do you go on sprees?"

"When I get my pension."

"And do you spend every cent?"

"Generally; yep."

"And does the Colonel act as your paymaster whenever you are hard up?"

"Yep."

"Might I inquire why he supports you in the path of destruction?"

"Huh?"

"Why does he help you go to the bad?"

"It does him more good than it does me hurt, I guess."

The depth of the sentiment was appalling: moreover, it was exquisitely convenient. From a physical standpoint it might be true enough, but looked at from the view of temporal comfort, the argument was bad. The Colonel was not one deliberately and in cold blood to care for the cultivation of his soul; there must be some other reason and I said so.

"I reckon there is."

"What is it?"

"I done him a service once."

"May I ask what it was?"

"I jest kept his little brother from getting shot."

"How was that?"

"Oh, it's a blamed long thing to tell."

"Never mind; I want to hear."

"Well, will you give me a quarter if I tell you?"

"What will you do with it?"

"Get two drinks."

"All right; go on."

He sat even further upon the edge of his chair and held one shaky arm out straight. I wondered if he might be going to declaim or repeat some ancient verse.

"That's how I got that arm."

"What arm?" I inquired, looking at the member.

"That. Don't you see I can't bend it?" I noticed it now for the first time and he rose in my estimation. "The piece of shell cut through my arm and along in here," placing his palsied fingers on his side. "The Colonel set an awful lot of store by that brother of his. His name was Kingsley, and he wasn't more'n 18. He was a mighty fine feller, too, and they told a lot of stuff about his havin' a young wife up there in the North. They sez she was the very girl the Colonel was mashed on, too. I dunno how true it was, but I reckon it wasn't all lies, because the Colonel ain't never married, and onct when he had the fever he done a lot of talkin' about some woman named Dora, an' that was the name that Kingsley told me his wife had. The Colonel's a good hearted cus, ain't he?"

I replied with conviction that he was.

"If it had been me an' my brother, I'd have wanted him killed off, I guess; but the Colonel he like to have went crazy every time the youngest got in the hot part of a fight. He sez to him onct —I heard him—'If you should be shot, it 'ud jest end Dora'; and one time they got a letter sayin' that Dora had a little girl. The Colonel told Kingsley then that he'd have to take more care of himself than ever. Kingsley, he just laughed. He was a brave feller, kind of hot headed, and I guess he wasn't as much in love with his Dora as the Colonel was."

The story came to an abrupt end here. The veteran was thinking over his past. In course of time he went on:

"Onct, just before the baby was born, there was a fight and the Colonel couldn't make Kingsley stay where it was safe. He jest laughed and went right into the fuss as soon as he could get there. The Colonel, he was charging around like a hen that's hatched ducks and sees 'em swimmin'. But he couldn't get near his brother. He was by me for a minute and he sez to me to keep that fool boy out of trouble. 'Bout ten minutes later a shell busted near us and I got in front of Kingsley. That's all."

That was all. It certainly didn't sound like much, as the laconic old fellow put it. I looked at his face, which was to the last degree "battle scarred," as the soldiers say; at his nervous hands and wavering eyes, his filthy coat and shapeless hat. This was all that was left of a hero—a man who for a mere friend had risked death and endured worse than death. I admired a character I could not understand. Then, with the sophistry of my race and kind, the mighty virtue of small souls, I condemned his weakness.

He was disgusting: a dirty old drunkard, a beggar, too: a man who would ask for a dime to get a drink with; lost to all pride and sense of shame. It was men of his kind who gave old soldiers such a hard name: and then I remembered that it was men of his kind who had composed our army: who had "made a thoroughfare for freedom and her train"—a thoroughfare which no fifty by three hundred miles can measure—a thoroughfare for destiny and a pathway on eternity.

However, I came down to his mental level by degrees. He was quivering with anticipation and the hand of the good arm was lying on his knee, ready to be stretched out at a moment's notice. I assumed the air that went usually with the act of swearing men into Uncle Sam's service, and which is the nearest one to severe and unimpeachable virtue that a lieutenant can command.

"What makes you drink like that?" I felt that the role of reformer did not suit me.

"I like it."

"But why don't you try to stop?"

"Can't—now."

"You could have once?"

"Yep."

"Whatever made you start in?"

"The pain from the wound. I got drunk to stop it, and by and by, when it had stopped for good, I couldn't let up. Ain't you done askin' questions yet? I want that quarter."

Now, I have no doubt that I was guilty of an infringement of the laws of the State of California in assisting to promote drunkenness and disorder—if not legally, morally—and I also realize that the powers that be would have been justified in depriving me of the detail in that fair State which I thoroughly understood to be a very soft thing after the rigors of Montana weather, because I was helping one who drew the pension which the Government kindly gives to its disabled supporters, and who was the inmate of a soldiers' home, to bring discredit on his kind; but my conscience did not reproach me in the least for turning over to him enough of my month's pay to keep him gloriously drunk for a week, nor did it even when, two hours later, I saw him taken in a limp and senseless state to the station house. I told the Colonel and he paid the veteran's fine—for the thirty first time, he informed me.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Duty as Directed.

Dr. Pilllem—Did you administer the opiate at 9 o'clock, as I directed?

Mrs. Gamp (with a sniff)—That I did, sir. But it seemed a pity to have to wake the poor man out of the first sound sleep he's had in four days to give it to him!

HONORS TO THE DEAD.

The Graves of Veterans Are Decorated.

SERVICES AT SCOTCH PLAINS.

Roswell G. Horr Delivered a Patriotic Address in Music Hall—Glowing Tributes to the Men Who Cemented the Ties of Unionism—Mr. Horr Says All Should Cultivate Patriotism.

The celebration of Memorial Day by the G. A. R. and kindred organizations carried with it more significance this year than it has for some years past. For weeks plans have been formulating with the idea of making it the most successful ever held.

In the morning John Hand Camp, No. 28, S. of V., accompanied by the Plainfield Cornet Band, a delegation from the G. A. R. Posts and Women's Relief Corps, went to Scotch Plains, where they held special services over the grave of the late John Hand. When Scotch Plains was reached they were met by the Hook and Ladder Company and a large number of school children prettily dressed in white, the latter being in charge of Rev. Dr. Parks. They carried handsome bouquets of flowers that were used in decorating the graves. The party then marched to the Baptist Cemetery and took positions around John Hand's grave. After the band had rendered America in an effective manner the opening part of the service was taken up by Capt. W. C. Dobbins, after which Chaplain Raymond McVoy offered prayer. The members of the Camp then sang one verse of America. Rev. Mr. Braker was introduced and made a short patriotic address. He was followed by Dr. Parks who also made a few remarks. Both were excellent and impressed the large audience that was present.

A dirge was then played by the band after which three volleys were fired over the grave by the firing squad. The benediction was pronounced by Dr. Parks. A circuit was then made of the cemetery, and the graves of comrades were decorated with flowers by the children. The Camp and G. A. R. veterans marched from the cemetery and returned to Plainfield, the firemen accompanying them for a short distance.

At 12:45 the Grand Army posts and Sons of Veterans, and a delegation from Somerset Council, No. 104, J. O. U. A. M., met at Headquarters, and forming, followed out the line of march as arranged by Marshal Wm. Hand, who led the procession. They went down Park avenue to Fifth street, to Central avenue, to Front street, to Grove, to Linden avenue, to Somerset street, and when in front of the North Plainfield Public School, halted to witness the raising of the flag that was presented by Somerset Council a few days ago. From there they proceeded to Music Hall. The hall was filled with friends of the G. A. R., Sons of Veterans, and Woman's Relief Corps.

On the stage were seated a large number of children dressed in white and each hold holding a small flag. The services were in charge of Commander W. W. Coriell, assisted by Comrades Mague, Crosley, Randolph, M. C. Dobbins and C. B. Stephens. Dr. Lewis opened the services with prayer. The children, under the direction of First Sergeant H. J. Martin of Camp 28, rendered excellent vocal music. Mr. Martin deserves great credit for his efforts and the children also, for the excellent results. Ex-Congressman Roswell G. Horr was then introduced and spoke interestingly to the veterans and their friends. He told in a realistic manner the origin of patriotism, and also of what should inspire each one to cultivate it. He told about the veterans who were receiving pensions, and said that there were ten deserving ones not geting pensions where there was one undeserving. His remarks in regard to the feeling in the South at the breaking out of the war were pointed truths not to be denied. He paid glowing tributes to Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and others, and briefly stated the important parts they acted in bringing to a successful close the severe fight which lasted for three years. At frequent intervals Mr. Horr was loudly applauded for the wit and humor, which he mixed with the more serious sides of his address.

Following the address, Prof. Wilson of Connecticut sang effectively a war song, which was followed by a selection by the children. An impressive and interesting dialogue was then given by Miss Sadie Smith, assisted by two little girls. "The Canteen" a beautiful recitation was ably given by Sergeant of Guard H. S. Thatcher, and brought home memories of the past to the veterans. Clarence Mills then rendered a medley on the violin that was well executed, and later he gave a recitation, entitled "The Gallant Fifth". After singing by the chorus the services closed with a beautiful tableau, entitled "Emancipation." During the rendition of the programme the Cornet Band gave several choice selections.

The Womens Relief Corps deserve unstinted praise for their earnest efforts to make the programme of yesterday the success that it was.

After the services the children marched to the Republican Association rooms, where they were treated to an abundance of ice cream and cake.

BASEBALL VICTORY.

The Y. M. C. A. Beat the Westfield Team by One Run.

An exciting game of baseball was played between the Plainfield and Westfield Y. M. C. A. teams Thursday morning on the grounds of the latter. The teams were evenly matched and the spectators, a number of whom went from this city, were filled with the sort of enthusiasm that is expressed in the indescribable language of the kranks, and which seeks to rattle and befuddle the players. The Westfield men had the best end of the game up to the last two or three innings, when the Plainfielders got down to work and pulled out by beating their opponents by a score of 11 to 10. The score follows:

THE MILBURN RACE.

Scott and Barnett Get the Time Prizes.

The Milburn-Irvington road race was won by F. M. Richt, of Brooklyn, in one hour, 14 minutes and 30 seconds. The time prize was won by Monte Scott of this city, one hour 12 minutes and 28 seconds, with A. H. Barnett, of Westfield, second, in one hour, 12 minutes and 29 seconds. Monte finished twenty-fifth and Barnett twenty-ninth.

Titus crossed the tape at ten miles in 28 minutes and 55 seconds, and seemed to be showing his pace. After riding two miles further he gave it up. It was the general impression that Titus would not finish the twenty-five miles, as he had been training down South on a track, and it was considered foolhardy for him to engage in a twenty-five-mile road race over a very hilly course without some recent training.

With Titus out of the race, Barnett and Scott went right in for the time prizes. Scott finished his first five miles in 13 minutes and 46 seconds, and the ten miles in 28 minutes and 9 seconds. At fifteen miles the contest had resolved itself down to about five riders for first place, Monte Scott covered his fifteen miles in 42 minutes and 48 seconds.

Scott was leading Barnett at twenty miles, and his time, 57 minutes and 58 seconds, made it evident that no records would be broken.

Postoffice Change.

C. F. Gullberg, of the railway postal service of the B. & O. between New York and Washington, was called in temporarily by Postmaster Hetfield yesterday to help him out during the absence of Joel D. Hedden, the mailing clerk. Mr. Gullberg is a son-in-law of Augustus M. Frazee, and is laying off on account of an attack of rheumatism. It is hoped that Mr. Hedden, who has been in his present position for nearly ten years, will soon be able to return.

QUEER ACCIDENT.

W. R. Cock Fractures His Kneecap While Riding a Bicycle.

W. R. Cock of 235 East Fifth street and his friend, Clifford Wharton, went out for a bicycle ride yesterday afternoon. Before he left he told his sister that if he did not return early not to worry as he might make a call.

They went as far as Westfield and while riding along slowly, Mr. Cock felt a sudden snap in his right leg, and was unable to use it. He was taken to a house near by and Dr. Harrison of Westfield was called. He found that the knee cap was fractured. The injury was bandaged. A little later a carriage was procured and he was brought to Plainfield, and at his own request was taken to Muhlenberg Hospital. He then notified his sister, which was about 10 last evening.

Dr. Endicott is in attendance and today Mr. Cock is resting quietly and has little pain, though he suffered considerably while riding to Plainfield.

He thinks that his right leg has become weakened through bowling.

Mr. Cock is one of the founders of Muhlenberg Hospital and the only one now living. He is at present secretary of the Board of Governors.

Can't Wear Shoulder Straps.

A law was made by legislators of New Jersey last Winter making punishable by a fine of $500 the wearing of shoulder straps by any organization except the National Guard or State Militia. It was enacted for the reason that bicycle clubs, and in fact all sorts of clubs were wearing them. It also affects the organization of the Sons of Veterans, and they have been compelled to remove them.

It is hoped that next Winter the Sons of Veterans will be allowed to replace them, and an effort will be made to secure the enactment of such a law.

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

Haddenham Advocates That Main Sewers Be Built By the County.

[BY HADDENHAM.]

All this pother about sewerage, which by the way grows in extent, is suggestive. We have passed the time when Municipal Government was mere patching and tinkering, and have reached the day when it must be recognized as something to be based on scientific principles. It has always seemed to me that the main sewers of the counties should be done by the State. All that a town would need to do then would be to drain within its own limits, and carry its outlet to the most convenient channel. It would be cheaper and in all respects more complete than the present system. The chief difficulty rests on the lack of legislators with honesty enough, and brains enough to carry it out. But is that inseparable?

I was called upon a short time ago by a young girl, about sixteen years of age, who wanted to collect a bill. She was bright, and is said to be one of the foremost pupils in a Grammar School, not far outside the limits of Plainfield, where she has been through all the grades. As the account was small, and I happened to have a few pennies in my pocket, I asked her to receipt the bill. After some gymnastic exercises, which seemed necessary to get a good light and then a firm grip on the pencil, she wrote: "payed New Jersey"! Can anybody offer me a reasonable explanation of such a phenemena? Twenty years ago, perhaps, the late Richard Grant White often discussed with me about our public school system, in which we both took interest, as estimated by results. He once told me he had been trying for two or three years to find out how it was that most of the children could never be got to spell or to speak correctly, and he had given up the task in despair. It is equally true and nearly as puzzling today.

CAN FLEE FROM WRATH.

Mr. Nelson, Though, Feels Sorry for Dunellen.

THE OBJECTORS ARE EXCITED.

Dr. Brakely Says Plainfield's Cheek is Appalling—Mr. Nelson Gets Sarcastic and Calls Plainfield Pinch Gut—Dunellen Residents Are Going to Petition the Council.

That Dunellen is very much interested as to where Plainfield locates her sewage beds, was evidenced Friday night when a meeting called by the Borough Commissioners was held in the W. C. T. U. rooms. There was a large attendance of citizens and property owners, who have become thoroughly aroused over the subject. John Moynihan, who is a member of the Sewer Committee, called the meeting to order and made a statement as follows:

"Last Fall Plainfield threatened to locate their sewer beds near Dunellen. You appointed a committee to go to Plainfield and present our side of the case, and we thought that we had succeeded in persuading them not to locate near us, but it seems not, and now they have decided to come to our very doors. I think it is only a question of time when Plainfield will have to go to tidewater with their sewage, but before they do, will probably expend from $75,000 to $100,000 in experimenting. We ought to be able to raise a reasonably strong protest. The Plainfield Councilmen claim the system to be harmless, but they have not demonstrated it to me. You all understand the matter as well as I do and something should be done."

By a vote of those present John Moynihan was elected chairman and George Day secretary. Opinions were then asked for in regard to the subject under consideration.

Alfred B. Nelson read a petition that was being circulated among Plainfield citizens protesting against the location of the sewage beds as intended. Residents of Clinton and Grant avenues had been seen by him and he asserted that a number of signatures had been secured. Mr. Nelson then spoke as follows: "Plainfield is with us, as I have not found but one man who is in favor of the filtration system. The Plainfield people people say it's an outrage for us to allow the beds to be located on the property purchased, and would not blame us if we should take up arms against them. The land has cost them nearly $25,000 and they have not put one penny of expense on it. I have the plans of every intermittent filtration plant in the country and know a little about the system. Framingham is cited by the Plainfield Councilmen. They have a population of 6,000 and it cost them $145,000 to put in the system, while Plainfield with her 13,000 inhabitants has been told that the plant will cost them $10,000. It costs Framingham $6,000 a year to maintain their system while Plainfield is informed that a man and one boy is all that is necessary to look after their system. You know what a boy's work is? Our friend, Mr. Frost, says there will be no solid matter; it will probably be the first case of the kind. For Plainfield there will be about 8,000 tons of solid matter."

Mr. Nelson here drifted from his line of thought and related a funny story. Continuing he said:—"A number of years ago Plainfield was called Pinch Gut, and today she claims to be the richest city, per capita tax, this side of the Adirondacks, but she is still Pinch Gut. I suppose there will be no solids in the sewage matter, that people will be flocking from all directions to get a drink of the pure stream that will empty in the beds. In talking with a man tonight from Lincoln, England, where the same system is used, he told me that when the wind blew from the direction of the beds, the stench was terrible. When the proposed beds are located in Plainfield instead of people residing in that vicinity you will find goats and geese, as they will be the only ones able to stand the atmosphere. I can flee from the wrath to come, but you who own property will probably have to stay and suffer."

Secretary Day moved that Mr. Nelson be instructed to draw up a petition for Dunellen people to sign. The motion was carried, and the instructions followed out.

Mr. Craig stated that Councilman Frazee was decided as to which was the best course to pursue, and that was tide-water; and that the latter had been told by Councilman Moore, previous to the last Council meeting, that if the sewage beds were located as intended it would be the means of depreciating the value of property fully 25 per cent., and yet Mr. Moore went to the meeting and voted for the beds.

Fred Wilcox said that in talking with a Plainfield man, who owned property near the proposed beds, he told him that he would take $2,000 or $3,000 less than he originally asked.

Dr. Brakely was asked for his opinion, and said that Plainfield's cheek was appalling. No words could express his indignation. These bon tons who only sleep in Plainfield would not be affected, and they did not care how the others suffered. He remarked that Councilman Frost had said "That the Plainfield sewers would be his monument", when someone in the audience replied, "That he probably would be buried under it."

Dr. Brakely then made a motion, which was carried, that Mr. Nelson present the petition with the Dunellen signatures to the Council at the stated meeting.

Those present then signed the petition that had been prepared, and the meeting adjourned.

FROM THE SEWAGE BEDS.

Councilmen Return From Framingham More Satisfied Than Ever.

The Councilmen who went to Framingham, Mass., Thursday to investigate the sewage beds of that place returned home this morning. The party was composed of Councilmen Ginna, Fisk, Westphal, Moore, Consulting Engineer Farquar and R. H. Higgins.

The gentlemen made a thorough inspection of the workings and effects of the intermittent filtration system and return home convinced that Plainfield is doing the right thing in adopting this plan of sewage disposal.

Councilman Westphal was seen by a Press reporter this morning, and was very enthusiastic over his trip. He said that he was convinced beyond a doubt that there were no evil effects from the operation of sewage beds, and that the Dunellen citizens who had become so wrought up over this matter, did not know what they were talking about.

Mr. Westphal brought home a bottle of the raw sewage as it comes direct from the mains, and a bottle of the clear water which is the outflow; also a small quantity of earth from a field over which the sewage has flowed for six years. The party drank a quantity of the clear outflow which was apparently as good as any water. In fact, the Massachusetts Board of Health states that it is much better than the water the city of Boston uses.

The specimen water and earth are on exhibition in the windows of The Daily Press.

Mr. Westphal stated that he brought everything from the beds except the odor, and an effort was made to find that, but without any results.

TO WASHINGTON ROCK.

Wise Young People Who Went Where It Was Cool.

The young people of Monroe Avenue Chapel were wise in taking to the mountains yesterday and thus escaping the intense heat that made it very disagreeable for those who remained in the city. The objective point was Washington Rock, which they reached about 2 in the afternoon and remained till 7:30 in the evening. During their stay various games were played to pass the time away, and later all partook of excellent refreshments.

Those in the pary were: the Misses Lottie Beekman, Georgia Beekman, Neal Beekman, Frazee, Aldrich, Ackerman, Adams, Stassord, Ada Wenzel, Bertha Wenzel, Elenore Wenzel, Mr. and Mrs. Bronard, Mr. and Mrs. Hicks, Rev. Mr. O'Donnell, and Messrs. Neuman, S. Beekman, Hayes, Saums, Aldrich, and Frank Fulton.

Women Who Want to Vote.

Just now, there are flying about in this town, and indeed all over the State, a thousand or more copies of the petition asking that School Suffrage be restored to the women of New Jersey. This petition will be presented to the Legislature at Trenton next week, and it is strongly hoped that they will take favorable action on it.

"No one has refused to sign for me", said a lady who is one of the canvassers for Plainfield; "and one conservative gentleman said 'Sign that petition? Yes indeed, I would go a long way to sign it." All who are interested in the cause of education, and who is not, should attend the meeting at High School Hall on Saturday evening of this week, when many well-known speakers will give the reasons why women should have a voice in school elections, and will tell how well school suffrage for women has worked in our own State (in the rural districts) and elsewhere.

Ladies Aid Elect.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Congregational Church held their annual meeting yesterday for the election of officers for the coming year, with the following result: President, Mrs. Gambling; secretary, Mrs. B. T. Barnes; treasurer, Mrs. E. Laing; directors, Mrs. Boss, Mrs. Batson; board of managers, Mrs. Hand, Mrs. Force, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Goodrich, Mrs. Nomer, Mrs. Weseman, Mrs. VanAlstyne, Mrs. Morgan.

Arrangements were made for a voluntary sociable to be given June 14.

—The home of Mr. and Mrs. John McCarthy, of Evona, has been made happy by the advent of a bright little boy.

ADMIRABLE INSTITUTION

What the Muhlenberg Hospital Has Done For a Year.

THEY ARE ALMOST FREE OF DEBT.

Treasurer's Report Shows That They Owe $150—All Legacies Will Be Preserved Intact As Memorials of the Donors—New Operating Room Completed and Equipped.

The Board of Governors of the Muhlenberg Hospital held their annual meeting on Monday evening, listened to reports of the past year and elected officers and committees for the coming year.

One hundred and seventy-seven patients have been cared for in the Hospital, and the average time of their stay there has been twenty-four and one-half days. That is, there has been an average of twelve patients in the Hospital every day throughout the year. Of all these, but sixty-five have paid anything; the other one hundred and twelve having received board, nursing, medicine and medical and surgical attendance free. What the latter means no one but the doctors themselves can fully understand; but persons who have had in their own families such severe cases of illness as abound in the Hospital, and have enjoyed the services of the faithful and talented members of the Hospital staff of physicians will have some idea of what a contribution those physicians make every year to the sick and needy.

The treasurer's report gave receipts and disbursements as follows:

Receipts.
Donations	$2,997
Hospital Sunday	447
Woman's Auxiliary Board	898
Nurses fees	8
Patients	1,300
Interest from Burlingham fund	104
Money borrowed	150
Disbursements.
Various expenses	$1,400
Medicine	573
Provisions	1,798
Salaries and wages	2,241
Paid on mortgage	400

leaving the Hospital in debt $150.

The new operating room has been completed and equipped at a total cost of about $2,600, and is paid for. Among the furnishings of the operating room two of the most important articles are a combined hospital-wagon and stretcher, presented by W. R. Cock, and an operating table, which, like the stretcher, is of the very latest and most improved construction, presented by Miss Elizabeth R. Cock.

A training school for nurses has been established and is now in complete operation with four pupil nurses.

In March the Hospital received a legacy of $500 from the estate of the late Joanna K. Craig. Within a few months $1,900 will be received under the will of William R. Clarkson, and some real estate and a small sum of money from the estate of Henry F. Stites of Scotch Plains. In reference to the treatment of these and future legacies the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That all funds received as legacies by the Hospital be preserved intact as memorials of the respective donors, and that only the income therefrom be used for the support of the Hospital.

Though a foundation is thus laid for an endowment of the Hospital, yet, as the treasurer's report shows, considerable debt for current expenses has already been incurred, and it will be larger before the Summer is ended, while current receipts during this season are small.

The officers and committees are now as follows: President, Edward B. Clark; vice-presidents, Chas. Schipper and Samuel Huntington; secretary, William R. Cock; treasurer, George H. Goddard; managing committee, Messrs. Erickson, Cock, Huntington, Case and Goddard; finance committee, Messrs. Wood, Lowe, Bull, Whiton and Schipper.

TO OPEN DUER STREET.

J. C. Dyer Will Make No Effort to Defeat the Plan.

A determined effort will be made to secure sufficient signatures among borough residents to permit the opening of Duer street from the Babcock Building to Craig place. The work of circulating the petitions is in the hands of John Vetterlin, who will commence the work next week.

The work has been deferred in the past owing to the objections made by J. C. Dyer, who owns the house on Craig place that will have to be removed to allow the extension to be made.

Mr. Dyer was seen by a Press representative this morning, and he said that he should interpose no objections to the opening being made, except that he should want reasonable compensation for the removal of his house and purchase of the property. He said he had come to this conclusion after having found that with all the people he had talked with about the matter, all had advised him not to attempt to defeat the proposed opening, for it would be a good thing for borough and city.

WHAT BOYS CAN DO.

An Instructive Exhibition in the Boys Club Last Night.

The Manual Training Department of the Boys Club, held its first annual exhibition Thursday, at their rooms corner of Park and North avenue, and was a decided success. In the main clubroom, four tables were filled with specimens of the boys work, some of which were marvels of skill, considering the age of the young artisans. There were, for instance, some nice specimens of carved work which attracted everyone's attention; they were exhibited by George Apgar who is only 15 years old. A gate, designed and drawn by scale, afterwards executed in a first-class manner, called for many favorable comments; this was made by a 15 year old, John Butcher, who also exhibited a well made window frame. A small table, and a small step-ladder by Willie Skinner came in for a good share of praise. Pen trays, paper knives, boats, picture frames, match safes, (in shoe shape) dumb-bells, Indian clubs, and many other articles were exhibited by other boys, some of whom were: Tunis Hewitt, M. O'Keefe, C. W. Beitter, W. Lawler, J. Taylor, G. Killoran, Dan O'Keefe, F. McIntyre, W. Connett, Elmer and Harry Hoffman, Joe Berry, Peter Galbraith, Raymond Johnson, and many others.

In the Manual Training rooms, the work benches were filled with boys busy with various articles in course of formation. They were plied with questions by the numerous visitors, in regard to their work, and in their answers showed the thorough instruction they had received by Olaf Sangstad.

Every one of the many visitors expressed their interest in the work exhibited, and one gentleman even bought one of the articles as a souvenir.

GIRLS CLUB OPENED.

A Place for Recreation and Instruction for Young Women.

The reading room of the Girls Club, on West Second street near Madison avenue, was formally opened last night, under the auspices of the Ever-Ready Circle of King's Daughters.

The rooms, with piano, chairs, tables covered with books, papers and games, pictures, lamps, and a profusion of flowers, presented a very pleasant and homelike appearance.

At 8:30 every chair was filled, and a little entertainment was given. First came a piano solo by Miss Clyde Burnett, "The Prophetic Bird", by Schumann; then a recitation by Miss Mary Luckey, "Briar Rose". Miss Violet Irnell followed with a violin solo, "Polish Dance", by Kulawiak, accompanied on the piano by Miss Burnett. The next number was another piano solo by Miss Burnett, "Dance Caprice", by Grieg, after which Miss Luckey recited "How she entertained her sister's beau", which kept her hearers laughing from beginning to end.

Miss Lillian Estelle Oakley, President of the Ever-Ready Circle, then said a few words, explaining to the audience that the reading room would be open from 7:30 to 9:30 every evening except Sunday, through the Summer, and that girls were cordially invited to go there, where they would find good books and magazines, entertaining games, the piano always open, and some one to welcome and make them feel at home. She then asked those who would enjoy these privileges to sign their names in the register in order that the Circle might know how many were interested. She spoke of the intention to open classes in cooking, sewing, etc., in the Fall, and closed by inviting all present to remain while refreshments were served.

Other members of the Circle served lemonade and cake, and a social time was enjoyed by all, the King's Daughter and their friends endeavoring to make their guests enjoy themselves and feel at home.

At the close of the evening, the register showed a long list of names and addresses.

The rooms will be open, in future, every evening except Sunday.

The young women are very grateful for all the gifts that have been sent them, especially for the piano, and for the kindness of The Daily Press in allowing them the use of its columns. There are still, however, many things that they greatly need; especially would they be grateful for two or three lamps, and for some comfortable chairs.

Music For Young Men.

The young men's symphony orchestra, conducted by Prof. Conde, has been secured for the men's rally to be held at the Y. M. C. A. Building on Sunday, June 2. E. L. Suffern will deliver the address. A welcome is extended to all men.

—The condition of Mrs. Fred W. Yates, on whom a difficult operation was performed a few days ago, is still critical.

—The Joint Memorial Detail will probably meet next week to settle all business regarding the Memorial Day celebration.

EXPLOITS OF A VENTRILOQUIST.

Mr. Hartley Writes of More of His Wonderful Practical Jokes.

Herman Weiss keeps a small tinware and crockery store. Desiring to replenish my culinary wares, I called on him to make selections a few nights ago.

"Harry, wait on this gentleman," Weiss called to his assistant. At the same instant I called as from the cellar; "Harry, Harry, come down here and let me out."

"Where are you?" shrieked the lad.

"How did you get there?"

"None of your business; come down here and let me out."

"No, I won't."

"Not I. He might do me up."

Weiss was in a quandary. He resolved to rid himself of his unwelcome visitor. Now thoroughly aroused, but fearing to venture down into the cellar himself, he called to the supposed intruder: "How did you get down there?"

Desiring to bring Weiss's voice up to its highest pitch, I replied as from below: "I can't hear you."

"How did you get down there?" fairly shrieked Weiss, as he threw himself on his hands and knees and bent close to the floor in order to make himself heard.

"We will see," he said, "who will hang. Harry, go get a policeman."

And forthwith Harry went. The enraged Weiss in his excitement wanted to tender me $3.75 in change for a $2 bill. I waited long enough to see the lad return with a big policeman. Together they repaired in haste to the cellar. I could hear the lad say, as they proceeded on the way:

"You'll hear him call you. He just told me I was a big fool."

Some idea of the extent to which victims may be carried when once under my control may be gleaned from the following incident, true in all its details:

Half a dozen Italian boys selling their "first editions" stood under the shadow of big St. Paul's on Vesey street, New York. Tony Manoli, Angelo and Michael Rossi, Jim Bertoli and Frank Romalo were the names of the five principal actors in the scene. It was midday. The lads were gazing curiously through the big iron fence bars, upon the grand old weather beaten tablets under which rest the bones of long departed folk of Revolutionary times. Suddenly a voice, as from the old church, called:

The affrighted lads looked at each other in alarm. The more venturesome Tony cried out in answer:

"Where-a you are?"

"I am locked in here. Go and tell the policeman to let me out."

Tony was somewhat reluctant to do as he was bidden. The small lads all have an inherent fear of "de copper," so he replied mournfully:

"I'm afraida da cop."

"Go getta one," urged his companions, while one of them turned to me and asked:

"Wouldna you, Mist?"

"Who wants a paper?" I asked of Tony.

"Tony! Tony!" called the voice from the big edifice. "Let me out! I want to get out. I have been here seventy-five years and I am tired."

A crowd had now collected, but those in the rear could hear nothing, as the conversation I carried on was in the low, sepulchral tone. The lads appeared to be under a spell, and not a soul knew the cause of the disturbance.

"He mus-a be hungry." "How he get dere?" "Some-a bod mus-a let-a him out." "It's a big-a shame," they variously observed.

"What," he replied quickly, his face a picture of seriousness.

I gave the name of a friend of Mr. R.

Imagine my surprise to see Mr. R. ten minutes later with a crowd of eager and panting urchins at his heels, making for the spot with great haste. I tried to retreat without being observed, but the quick eye of my friend detected me in the act. The joke dawned on him at once, and taking me by the arm he led me to the nearest "grocery" to top off the event.

C. A. HARTLEY.

The Quakeress Was Appreciative.

One is reminded these hot days of the story of the dainty and demure old Quakeress who didn't dare to express her feelings, and her neighbor in the street car who did. The atmosphere of the car was at the point which, did the thermometers name such a degree, would be termed "sweltering."

The soft cap and kerchief and the sweet smile of the Quakeress were apparently untroubled by such mundane matters as heat. Presently, a big, fat, puffing man entered the car. His countenance looked as if it had been well buttered, his breath came in quick, hard pants, and he was rubbing his handkerchief all over his face and neck.

As he took his seat beside the quiet Quakeress he ejaculated:

At which the dear old Quakeress turned to him and said: "Thank thee."

IN THIS LAND OF THE FREE.

Points That Excel in Interest Those of Any Country Under the Sun.

The other night, before a small audience in a church in one of the side streets of New York, a lecturer gave a vivid account of a tour he recently made in a region which has not been visited by everybody, and is neither in the Alps nor in the Himalayas. The lecture was illustrated with stereopticon views. He started out from a huge edifice, the picture of which made a deep impression upon those who saw it, and the description of which was truly eloquent.

He then gave a view of a banqueting palace on wheels, not a thing of the fancy, but one which actually exists. It raised wonder. He next presented a picture of an old house of singular historical interest, which was once inhabited by a wretch whose name is familiar even to school children. His words were thrilling. Then came a far famed university, a renowned city, a towering shaft that rises over a celebrated battlefield, a landscape of unsurpassed beauty, an edifice the like of which were hard to find, the headquarters of a military commander who figured in a sanguinary war, the domicile of a patiotic goldsmith whose name is romance, an ecclesiastical edifice, lovely gardens, an athenæum such as Athenæus never saw, a museum of superlative architecture, and other spectacles not less fascinating or surprising.

His tour was not through Italy or Spain or any part of France, or any other distant country upon which so many lecturers like to dilate as they stand near a stereopticon. It was a jaunt from New York to Boston, starting at the Grand Central Station and ending at Bunker Hill.

It is a melancholy fact that there are Americans who neither know nor appreciate the features, the traditions, the beauteous scenery, the notable, the architectural and monumental spectacles, the old institutions, the Revolutionary episodes, the history or the life of their own unequaled country.

There are Americans who can babble for a week about what they have seen in England, or Switzerland, or Sicily, but who couldn't tell you any more about their native country, or even about picturesque New York, than if they were Comanches who had spent their lives in scalping pale faces.

The school boys and girls ought to make it their business to get all the available knowledge possible of the United States, as well as of Rome and Greece. Youngsters! can't you somehow find out a good deal about the great and wonderful land you live in?

Spoiled His Good Work.

Mr. X. is a contractor of philanthropic tendencies. He attends the meetings of his workingmen; he goes to call on them regularly twice a year, and if a workman is about to leave he always wants to know the reason why.

Hence, when a short while ago his bookkeeper told him that Pat Mulcahey was going to leave, Mr. X. immediately requested the pleasure of Pat's company in the inner office.

"Well, well, Pat," he began, "what's this I hear about your leaving? What's the matter? Haven't I always treated you well?"

"Indade you have, sorr," replied Pat.

"Well, what's the trouble?"

"It's that domned boss Smith. Shure yisterday he took me away from me hod an' bricks, an' sint me out on a hill that was covered wid rocks. He put me on the top, with a shteel rod in me hand.

"'Drill a hole there,' says 'e.

"An' I squatted down wid a hammer an' the rod, an' I worruked fer two hours makin' a foine, nate hole. An' then, will you beleve it, sorr, a domned fool came along, an' filled the hole wid powdher an' blue it all to smithereens, an' I'll not do that fool thrick ag'in."—Boston Budget.

An Indian's Ruse.

"It was back in the 70's, when the Cheyennes were troublesome in the Nation. I was in the 6th Cavalry and a party were out after the reds. Our major charged a band of Indians and captured a lot of ponies. They turned out to be Wichitas, and I was sent to the agency near Fort Sill to report and turn them over to the owners.

"When on my way back I was met by a lot of Wichitas, and we parleyed, then they joined us. The next day we saw a band of over 100 Cheyennes in war paint.

"They were for killing us, but the chief of our party persuaded them to let us go. We went to a gulch quite a distance away, and, I supposed, to camp. Our leader piled a lot of sunflower stocks over the fire, and I asked what for. 'Make heap smoke. Fool Injun.' He then got his ponies and we took our horses and ran as fast as we could for about ten miles. The wily Indian was afraid that if we waited there we would be killed by the Cheyennes.

"The band surrounded that spot, guided by the smoke, as I learned later, but our Wichita friend had fooled them with his clever ruse."—Kansas City Journal.

The young ladies of Westfield threaten to boycott every young man in that town who plays ball with the female nine on Friday of this week. The girls of Westfield are of the right kind.

The movement under way to close the barber shops in this city on Sunday is in the right direction. Even working six days a week the tonsorial artist has a hard life, and it is too much to ask of him to labor half a day on Sunday.

The deadlock in the Common Council in New Brunswick is beginning to get serious. Here it is 100 degrees in the shade, and the dispensers of the amber-colored and foam-bedecked fluid are without licenses permitting them to minister to the parched tongue and throbbing head, owing to the reform officials suspending public business, because they are unable to come to an agreement in filling municipal offices.

The Cranford Chronicle this week advocates the establishment of a borough government for Cranford, and in reference thereto says.

> Why does not Cranford get in line, now that the legal conditions regulating the change are so easily complied with?
> But one reason occurs to us, and the mere stating of it should awaken a purpose to destroy its potency. Cranford, as a borough would no longer be the plaything of Elizabeth capitalists and politicians. Its affairs would probably be managed with an eye single to Cranford interests. Its officials would probably be men of oak, able to withstand the winds blowing from the County Seat rather than reeds, which can only hope to exist by meekly bowing whichever way the stronger power ordains.

The appointment of Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh of Plainfield by Judge McCormick to defend Freehill, alias Sloane, the alleged slayer of Policeman Alfred E. Jewell, of Rahway, meets with general approbation from members of the bar and the public generally. The man will be on trial for his life, and his defender should be a man of intelligence and have the respect and confidence of not only the court but the public at large. Such a man is Craig A. Marsh. Mr. Marsh has never been known to desert a client or leave a case where there was a scintilla of a chance to win.—New Jersey Contractor.

The Union County Collector's annual report, which is published in the leading papers of that county, presents to taxpayers of that county an interesting statement in detail of the county's entire business for the past fiscal year. It shows, among other things, that the Board of Freeholders continues to pay off the county's indebtedness at the rate of about $25,000 a year—the last year's payment amounting to $26,000. It also shows that by economic and business-like methods, the Board has the snug sum of $23,000 on hand with which to commence business for the current year. No county in this State has a better Board of Chosen Freeholders, and almost nineteen out of the other twenty wish they had a Board equally as good. Union county certainly sets Middlesex county a good example.—New Brunswick Home News.

The right of way for a new pipe line is being purchased through our county, and of course every one is delighted. It shows an improvement in business, competition in carrying, and gives the farmers on whose lands the right of way is purchased good prices for the privilege. In Tioga county, in an adjoining State, $20 per rod is paid, and our farmers of course should have as much. That is not as near tide water as we are. One thing the farmers should be on guard, and that is to require money, not promises. We have heard where they made promises, paid $1 and got the permit or deed, and then the promise as to the balance was not kept. Cash in hand is the motto, and then sign.—Somerset Democrat.

Parties representing a syndicate similar to the above have been in North Plainfield seeking signatures for a few days past. When the Democrat says that $20 per rod has been paid for right of way in another state they should understand that land in the county they mention you can purchase an acre of ground at that price. A rod is only sixteen feet, remember.

The street railway extension petition came in with the cold wave. It is to be hoped that it will not go out with it.

There should be but little, if any, opposition from the residents of North Plainfield to the Watchung avenue extension project which will be considered by the Borough Council at their meeting on Friday evening. With this thoroughfare opened up where it is proposed, a vast improvement will have been gained on both sides of the brook.

In many portions of Middlesex county the township authorities are having proper sign boards placed along the country roads designating the points to which they lead. The man who proposed this move should have a medal. Not a medal, however, on account of his originality, because the system was in vogue when the present generation of public officials were wearing knee pants, but because he has a realization of how perplexing it is for a stranger to pick his way at a point where a highway diverges into several directions.

The game of baseball between the Westfields and the Arlingtons of this city at Drake Park, Westfield, Saturday, was won by the Westfield team by a score of 16 to 12. The Westfield team has now defeated the three amateur Plainfield teams. The game with the Stars, the women's baseball team, is scheduled for Friday of this week. The Westfield young ladies say that they will refuse to recognize any of the young men who attend the game.

The Crescents of this city have made an alteration of their club with the following result: P. Winn, third base; M. Heffern, right field; D. Kane, catcher; T. Lyons, short stop; W. Shannon, left field; P. Townly, centre field; W. VanHorn, pitcher; S. Weineiger, second base; A. McGinley, first base; W. Townley, pitcher and centre field. They will play the Flemington Athletic Club on the afternoon of July Fourth on the Crescent grounds and on July 6th they will play the South Orange Athletic Club of Newark. T. Lyons is captain and W. VanHorn manager.

The Boys Club nine went to Westfield to play Saturday afternoon. Although the opposing nine were a much older team, yet in the four innings which were played before the storm stopped the game, the Boys Club led by a score of 10 to 11. The features of the game was the pitching of Larry Doyle, a catch by Tunis Hewitt, and a foul fly by Harry Thomas, which seemed to have a reserved seat in the sky, and came back to earth very reluctantly; and a hit by Willie Parsons. A return game will be played at an early date.

The Monroe Avenue and Hope Chapel teams played their first game of the season on their grounds on West Front street Saturday afternoon. The playing was excellent. Littell struck out 9 men and Muir 2. Only 5 innings were played. The teams and the score follows:

Monroe Chapel.		Hope Chapel.

A great game of ball was played last Saturday afternoon on Crescent Oval between the Y. M. C. A. and Cranford teams. The features of the game was Schoonmaker's three-base hit; Freeman's work at second-base, Davis's work in centre-field and the battery work of Corey and Townley. The teams and the scores by innings are as follows:

CYCLING COMMENT.

Miss Arline Crane, of West Eighth street, now rides a new Cleveland Swell Special purchased from the Martin Cycle Company.

An outbreak between the League of American Wheelman and its Class B racing men is momentarily expected. The action of the league in the professional ranks at the opening of the racing season, and the reported dictatorial methods pursued by the Chairman of the L. A. W. Racing Board in governing the racing class, is reported to be the cause of the impending trouble. Sanger and Titus who were entered at the meet in Trenton Saturday, after leaving Plainfield went to Sprinfield to go into training, both feeling that they were unable to compete in the Mercer County Wheelmen's events. The Trenton people made a protest to Chairman Gideon about the absense of these riders, which was a violation of the racing rules of the L. A. W. Chairman Gideon threatened to suspend them for not filling their entry at Trenton, but such action has not yet been taken. The racing men are very indignant at the threat of the Racing Board, and rumors of trouble are numerous. Should the Racing Board suspend a number of the leading Class B riders at this time, a likely result will be a combine of the riders supported by their employers, who will refuse to allow them to race at any of the circuit meets, and as a result the racing season will be spoiled.

What is expected to be the largest century run ever held is by the Race Committee of the Associated Cycling Clubs of New Jersey. The run will take place on July 6 from Newark to Asbury Park over the following route: Start from Washington Park, Newark, at 5 a. m., and proceed via Belleville, Passaic, Paterson, Montclair, Orange, Elizabeth, Westfield, Plainfield, New Brunswick, Matawan, Keyport, Red Bank, Little Silver and Long Branch to Asbury Park. Three-quarters of the distance is over macadam road. The entrance will be $1.50, including badge and survivor's medals. Several desirable prizes will be offered, namely, sterling silver cup, value $100, to the club having the largest number of survivors; sterling silver cup, value $50, to the club having the second largest number of survivors. The checking will be done by the number system, the checks being dropped in boxes at the several places selected by the committee. There will be eight checking places. Plainfield and New Brunswick will be dinner stops. An even pace will be maintained throughout, from ten to twelve miles being the rate. Entry blanks and any information pertaining to the run can be obtained by addressing A. H. Chamberlain, secretary of Race Committee, Associated Cycling Clubs of New Jersey, Lock Box 55, Rahway.

The report was submitted with many suggestions of laws to prevent future frauds.

'76 SPIRIT IN THE AIR.

Organization of the Fourth of July Committee.

ALL ARE FULL OF PATRIOTISM.

Mayor Gilbert Says That He is Heartily in Favor of The Observance of This Great Natal Day—Representatives Present From All Civic Organizations—J. W. Murray Chosen for Chairman.

One not acquainted wiih the details for the proposed Fourth of July celebation in this city, has no idea of the amount of enthusiasm and energy that has been bottled ready for an explosion, and those who attended the preliminary meeting of the committees from the various lodges, which was held in Red Men's hall last Tuesday, were even surprised themselves to see such a large representative gathering of prominent citizens. The meeting was called to order by Wm. Newcorn, chairman of the committee from Miantonomoh tribe of Red Men, who took the initial step in the proposed celebration. He stated the call and objects of the meeting and then suggested that those present elect a chairman.

V. W. Nash was chosen for that position and A. E. Kenney, secretary. Mr. Newcorn was then called upon and explained in detail his idea of the affair, which was to have a large parade in the afternoon, a mass meeting in the evening, followed by a display of fireworks.

The matter of selecting permanent officers was then brought up and it was very hard to settle on those who should be at the head. Some desired that the present officers act, while others wished Mayor Gilbert to serve in that capacity, with Mayor Hegeman of the borough as first vice-chairman. Mr. Gilbert seemed to be the choice. In the meantime John W. Murray's name was mentioned for the chairmanship. Mr. Gilbert finally found it necessary to speak, and he said in part as follows:

I am amazed, exceedingly amazed, at the large representation of Plainfield's secret societies here tonight. I have lived in Plainfield thirty years, been in politics a little, but had no idea of your strength. Had I known it, I probably would have been around to see you. It is well to be patriotic, and I will hold up both hands to help any patriotism there may be evident. What you want, however, is cold wisdom—mixed in with patriotism. This celebration will cost a good deal of money, and you should count the cost. You want a good begging committee. This affair won't run itself. It will be necessary to raise at least $1,000 to start with, to make it the splendid success it deserves, and if you appoint a good committee I will give $100 to start it off.

I am a very busy man and my wife complains, and justly too, about my being away from home so much. You must not ask me to be chairman of the committee. I remember being in court one time, and was asked what my business was. I replied that I was in several, vice-president of a bank, president of Music Hall Association, trustee of a church, and Secretary of the Clearing House. The man asking the question replied, that he "thought I was kind of a Poo Bah".

Mayor Hegeman also made a few remarks declining the position offered, stating he could not possibly attend to it. In spite of the determined effort to secure the two men at the head of the committees, they positively refused to serve.

Secretary A. E. Kenney, acting in accordance with a motion, read the list of societies present, and the chairmen responded for the lodge represented.

All were heartily in favor of the idea of the celebration, and with a few exceptions all were ready to join in. The others were obliged to report back to their societies.

The following officers were finally chosen: President, J. W. Murray; first vice-president, V. W. Nash; second vice-president, S. St. John McCutchen; third vice-president, George Rockfellow; secretary, H. C. Runyon; assistant-secretary, J. D. Anderson; treasurer, W. F. Arnold.

The chairman then appointed the following committee of five to fill any vacancies that might occur: Mayor Alexander Gilbert, Charles Ulrich, J. E. Flannery, H. Liefke, and William Newcorn.

T. J. Carey, G. Q. Packer, W. H. Brokaw were appointed a committee to notify the officers elected, who were not present.

After the whole affair had been well ventilated, and a considerable amount of wit and humor enjoyed, the meeting adjourned to meet Monday evening, June 10, at 8 o'clock.

IN DESPAIR.

Many Women Will Recognize It.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

"Oh, I am so nervous! No one ever suffered as I do! There isn't a well inch in my whole body! I honestly think my lungs are diseased, my chest pains me so; but I've no cough. I'm so weak at my stomach, and have indigestion horribly. Then I have palpitation, and my heart hurts me. How I am losing flesh! and this headache nearly kills me; and the backache —Heavens! I had hysterics yesterday. There is a weight in the lower part of my bowels, bearing down all the time; and there are pains in my groins and thighs. I can't sleep, walk, or sit. I'm diseased all over. The doctor? Oh! he tells me to keep quiet. Such mockery!

Inflammatory and ulcerative conditions at the neck of the womb can produce all the above symptoms in the same person. In fact, there is hardly a part of the body that can escape those sympathetic pains and aches.

No woman should allow herself to reach such a perfection of misery when there is positively no need of it.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound acts promptly and thoroughly in such cases; strengthens the muscles of the womb, heals all inflammation, and restores that unruly organ to its normal condition. Druggists are selling carloads of it. Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., will gladly and freely answer all letters asking for advice.

Mrs. E. Bishop, 787 Halsey Street, Brooklyn, N.Y., suffered all the above described horrors. Now she is well. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured her. Write her about it.

The city of Dunkirk, New York, is engaged in a law suit involving the location of the streets in a large section of the city, and the mayor and corporation counsel have called upon F. A. Dunham, of this city, to act as consulting engineer and expert witness in the matter. Mr. Dunham had the necessary surveys made last week and is attending the trial which is now in progress at the county seat.

SWODY WINS.

The Street Railway Company Mulcted $100 in a Funny Action.

In the Common Pleas Court at Elizabeth Thursday the case of Valentine Swody against the Plainfield Street Railway was tried.

It will be remembered that this case was brought into Justice Newcorn's Court about two months ago. Swody secured a verdict of $75 for damages to a horse resulting from an electric current charging water in a gutter in front of J. K. Arnold's grocery store on Somerset street, into which the horse stepped. The company then took the case to Elizabeth, claiming Swody was not entitled to any damages. The case occupied most of yesterday and was tried for all it was worth on both sides. After the action had been called it was learned that two important witness for Swody were absent.

For a few minutes counsel for Swody was placed in an embarassing position, for, as the case stood, he would surely have been non-suited. Judge Coddington, counsel for the plaintiff, looked around the room and saw present J. A. Karet, who is a graduate of the London University of Science.

He was asked if he knew anything about electricity, and replied that he did. He was put on the stand and proved many valuable points for the justness of the verdict for Swody. He was cross examined severely but maintained his testimony with clearness. Previous to the case being summed up it looked as if the company would win.

In his final argument Mr. Coddington was eloquent and convincing. As he made point after point he would clinch each with undeniable evidence, leaving no grounds for his opponents to fight on.

The company was represented by Depew & Parker of Newark. The jury after a half hour deliberation brought in a verdict of $100 and costs for Mr. Swody, which was $25 more than was secured in the justice's court. They will now have to pay the costs of both trials.

MR. BARKALEW'S FAST WALK.

The Freeholder Sprinted Four-and-a-Half Miles to Catch a Train.

Freeholder L. [illegible] Barkalew, of the borough, has a record for pedestrianism since Wednesday last. On that day he and Freeholder Lutkins, as a committee, went to North Branch to inspect work being done on a bridge at that point. Freeholder Lutkins was fortunate enough to secure a ride to Somerville in a farmer's rig while Freeholder Barkalew was left behind at North Branch with no train for this city until 8 p. m. If he could have reached Somerville in an hour's time he would be able to catch a train which would bring him home by 6. He started off pacing the railroad ties. He was bound to cover the four-and-a-half miles in an hour or bust his suspenders. He arrived at the Somerville station just as the train was pulling out of the depot and succeeded in swinging himself on to the last car, thoroughly exhausted, and arrived in this city as soon as his partner, Freeholder Lutkins.

BIG FIRE IN NEWARK.

Ballentine's Brewery Loses $225,000 By Flames.

Newark, June 4.—A big fire which could be seen for many miles around this city, destroyed several of the buildings of P. Ballentine & Sons' brewery this morning.

The massive eight-story brick structure on Front street and the Passaic River, with its wealth of grain, is a total loss, with the exception of the charred walls.

The fire was only got under control at 10 o'clock this morning. It is calculated that the total loss will be about $225,000. The insurance is about $50,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

HENNESSY WAS ELEVATED.

Being an Incident Related to Support a Philosophical Proposition.

"Inherent in every person," said Frederick Upham Adams, "is a great talent for superintending. Man is naturally a 'boss.' The ability to be bossed is an acquired habit." Besides being chief smoke inspector Mr. Adams is strongly addicted to esoteric philosophy. "I recall an instance illustrative of this proposition," continued Mr. Adams as he sought a match. "Up Elgin way the section gang was out repairing the track. There were seven men in the outfit, including the section boss. It was pay day, and the executive had to go to Elgin to the pay car and get the money for his men. 'Hennessy,' he said to one of the men, 'kape an eye on the b'ys while I'm gone.'

"Section Boss Casey had turned the curve and was beyond view by the time Hennessy had his pipe alight and was ready to discharge the functions of boss.

"'Fwat are yez doin, Mick?' he asked of his friend and late his equal, one Durkin.

"'Cuttin wades,' replied Durkin.

"'Kape on cuttin them,' said Hennessy.

"'For why are yez packin that guage about, Misther McDermott?'

"'I'm seein is the thrack straight.'

"''Tis a good thing the gauge is better capable of measurin than the eye av yez since the day Jim Casey gev ye the wallop. An be sure ye kape them paralll.'

"'Fwat are ye thryin to do with the push buggy, McGinnis?' and the dignitary turned his superior gaze on the man who was taking liberties with the running gear of a wheelbarrow.

"'It's oilin it I am,' returned McGinnis, with humility.

"'Drop it, man; drop it. There's a job for the masther mechanic. Take that bar and tamp up thim ties. Fwat th' 'ell does any man av the name of McGinnis know about machinery?'

"Then," said Mr. Adams, "Hennessy sat on the hand car and cursed his slaves for two hours, at the end of which time Casey returned with the pay."—Chicago Times-Herald.

She Was Very Desperate.

The actions of a pretty girl attracted the attention of the passengers on a Market street car yesterday.

When she entered the car, there was nothing specially noticeable about her and she was not more noticed than any of the other female passengers. But it was not long before her peculiar actions had made her the observed of all observers. She was apparently in great distress and seemed to be laboring under great excitement. Her movements gave the impression that she was struggling to restrain herself from doing something desperate. Her face was flushed and one hand clutched the corner of her cape while the other was moving restlessly up and down the inside.

When the excitement had reached its highest point and all eyes were on her, she suddenly drew forth a knife and turned it toward herself.

It flashed upon the horrified passengers that she was going to stab herself and four or five gentlemen sprang toward her

The one behind her grabbed her arm and another caught her hand. Her excitement immediately vanished and her face broke into ripples of laughter as she said, "If you won't let me do it, one of you must pay my fare or cut my cape so I can get my purse; it has slipped into the lining."

When the conductor came forward, five very sheepish gentlemen each offered him a nickel for the young lady.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

FERN SONG.

Dance to the best of the rain, little Fern,
And spread out your palms again,
And say: "Though the Sun
Hath my vesture spun,
He had labored, alas, in vain!
But for the shade
That the Cloud hath made,
And the gift of the Dew and the Rain!"
Then laugh and upturn
All your fronds, little Fern,
And rejoice in the beat of the Rain!

THE POSTMISTRESS.

Working hours were over in the Great White canyon. Mary Verner pulled down the little window of the postoffice of which she was the mistress, swept the contents of the narrow counter into a drawer, which she locked; then pinning a broad leaved hat above the brown curls that clustered about her brow she passed out of her log cabin into the fresh, sweet, evening air.

As she reached the low fence which ran before her house a hurried footstep sounded through the gathering gloom, and a man's voice said:

"Is that you, Mary, my girl? You look little more than a ghost under the shadow of those bushes."

The girl—young and slender and graceful as a fawn—ran out into the lonely road.

"You've kept your promise, dearest, and come to see me," she cried as she threw herself into the arms of her lover.

Reuben Halse kissed the red lips so frankly offered him before he spoke.

"Yes, Mary, I've kept my promise, but I've come to say 'Goodby.'"

"'Goodby — goodby?' You're going away? You're going to leave me—your sweetheart—your wife that is to be?" She clasped her arms closely about him and trembled like a leaf.

"My dear little girl, don't cry—don't grieve. You've been my sweetheart, faithful and true, but we can never marry."

The strong man's voice broke and died into silence.

"Go on. Tell me the worst," sobbed the girl in his arms.

"Listen, dear. You know that lately things have gone wrong with me. The bit of money I've saved for our wedding in the fall was stolen, and then the cabin I'd built for you down by the Blue Pools was burnt. Still there was the farm stock and your little purse of savings left, but the drought has killed the stock, and—oh, Mary, how can I tell you?"

"Some one has robbed you of the money I gave you. Oh, my poor boy!" She stretched forth her pitying hands toward the man before her, who only bowed his head and shuffled his feet in the thick white dust.

"Tell me, Reuben; tell me how it happened. Ah, surely you are not thinking I shall blame you for such a misfortune!" and once more she crept to his side.

But Reuben thrust her from him.

"'Twas no misfortune. 'Twas a crime. Your little savings, those few coins you've starved and scraped to keep, lie there."

He pointed with his lean, brown hand down the canyon to where, amid a dense mass of foliage, a few lights twinkled.

Mary staggered.

"Down there? At Ffolliott's?"

"Aye, lass—at Ffolliott's! I lost it all at faro last night."

For a moment no sound but the evening breeze whispering among the creepers and bushes and the harsh note of a night bird broke the silence. Then a woman's voice, tender and low and full of tears, murmured, "Rube, dear Rube, I forgive you."

"Don't, Mary, don't! I'd rather you would strike me."

The stars twinkled their diamond eyes on the man and the girl as they said farewell; for Reuben had settled to leave the canyon that night.

"Bill Redfern, One Eyed Sammy and Joe the Portuguese are going too. We're all broke and may as well starve out there," and he waved his hand toward the wide forest land of Arizona, "as in this canyon here. Don't sob so, my girl. You'll break my heart. I'm not worth a tear from your pretty eyes or a choke in your white throat. But, Mary, you might pray for me sometimes, and when you're married to a good chap as don't go to Ffolliott's and neglect his farm for the tables and the bar think of me, who loved you, but was not worthy to have you."

One kiss on her brow, then a clatter of galloping hoofs, and Mary Verner was free to go back into her log cabin and sob out her heart till the dawn.

Reuben Halse and his companions had been gone from the Great White canyon for a week. Mary's cheeks, never very full of color, had grown pale and heavy, and blue lines beneath her large eyes told of sleepless nights and many tears.

Yet Paul Harding, Beauty Paul, as he was called in the canyon, thought he had never seen Mary look so lovely as he clattered up to the door of the postoffice one morning and asked the young postmistress if there was anything for him.

He watched, with his handsome dark eyes, her small, white fingers go through the letters lying on the counter before her.

But she finally shook her head.

"Nothing for you today."

Yet Paul seemed loath to go. He pulled his long, tawny mustache, jingled his spurred boots upon the floor and continued to stare through the pigeonhole window at the girl as she flitted about her usual business.

"Anything I can do for you?" she asked him presently.

"No," Paul said slowly, taking in every detail of the girl's pretty figure, clad in a cotton frock of gentian blue. "But might I speak to you one minute privately?"

"You can say what you've got to say where you are."

He stared silently, first at his boots, and as his eyes wandered up they lit on the snowy shelves of bright and simple utensils and shining saucepans which lined the walls.

"How differently you keep your place from what a man's shanty is!"

But she staid his compliments.

"You live down by the Blue Pools, don't you?"

"Yes, next to Reuben Halse till his place was burnt out and he came to my shanty. I saw Rube three days back."

"You saw Rube?" Mary clasped her hands above her heart.

"Yes. He and his chums passed through Long Tom's ranch. I've been out there this two months past helping him brand and count the cattle. Rube told me that you and he had parted and the reason why. He asked me to look after you a bit. You see, we've been good pals, and I'd like to do him a turn now he's gone under. You will let me look after you now and again, won't you, for Rube's sake?"

The handsome cowboy, straight as a dart, tall and strong as a giant, clad in the picturesque rough clothes of his calling, bent like a reed before the tiny blue clad figure of the postoffice mistress, who laid a slender white hand in his great palm and lifted her violet eyes to his dark ones.

"Surely, Paul Harding, for Rube's sake, you may look after me when I can't look after myself."

With that soft glance burning into his brain and those gentle words pulsing in his ears Beauty Paul swung himself into his peaked saddle and sent his horse full speed down the hill to Ffolliott's saloon.

It was for Rube's sake that the following Sunday Paul dressed himself in his best, brought a little two wheeled cart gay with bells and bright colors to Mary's door and asked her to drive out with him.

The day was fair, and Beauty Paul amused her with stories of Rube, and when they came to an end he told her of his own home in the heart of a green county in England. He made her laugh with his tales of college life and shudder with his descriptions of the campaign in Egypt which he had gone through. Only he did not tell her how he, an English gentleman and gallant officer, came to be loafing and drinking and gambling away his days and his health in Great White canyon. Paul Harding—degraded as he was and lacking in reverence for women—at least had too much respect for the little postmistress to tell her that black page in his life.

The day was an entire success, but it left a bitter after taste in Mary's mouth when she heard the next morning that Paul had spent the night at Ffolliott's drinking and brawling till dawn.

The next Sunday Mary shut herself within her log cabin, and neither the blue sky nor the gay cart and smartly caparisoned hose nor Beauty Paul himself could wheedle her out. She would not be seen, she said sternly, with one of Ffolliott's lot. She, however, relented and forgave him on his promise to amend for her sake.

As weeks and months went by and the green of the canyon changed to red and gold Paul found that if he was to "look after" Mary he had to give up the saloon.

And indeed for a space Ffolliott's knew him not till one October morning his allowance—the money which bought his family freedom from his disgraceful presence—arrived from England. For the next week Ffolliott's was a pandemonium, with the Beauty as a presiding demon.

Mary heard of it and refused to speak to or look at him. Then it was that he flung himself before her one day and prayed her to save him from that from which he was powerless to save himself—from drink and dice and bad companions. And she did what other good women have done before her and will do again. She placed her hand in his, and with her heart full of Rube Halse she promised to marry Paul—for his soul's sake.

All through that long, bitter winter she held to her promise. At Christmas he broke from her control, and she did not speak to him for days, but she ended by forgiving. When he was with Mary, he vowed to reform, not to set foot in Ffolliott's again, never to taste another drop of whisky nor look again at a card. But once beyond the sound of her low once, the touch of her small hand, and his resolutions melted like the winter snows.

The eve of their marriage day arrived and with it Paul's allowance from England. The occasion and the opportunity suggested a carouse, and Paul informed the "boys" he would be standing treat at Ffolliott's that night for the last time. The bar was soon crowded, for the Beauty was just the song singing, yarn telling, whisky drinking scamp who would be popular among the wild crew, especially as he stood treat so long as the bartender would stand him.

Paul was full of liquor. He had drunk Mary's health with every man in the place, and he was also full of luck for once in a way. A pile of gold lay before him on the table, and he was just proposing another round in Mary's honor when big Bill Redfern strode in and was greeted with a shout of "Hello, Bill! You back? What luck, pard?"

"Luck, my lads? I leave luck to fools and deadbeats. I've been working, and thank God I've worked for something. I've put my sweat and muscle into the ground, and I've struck ore. None of your dust or pockets, but a vein as broad as an ox's back and as long as a river, and so I've come back with Rube"—

Paul looked up with a start. His eyes flashed, and he seemed to grow sober in a moment as the situation presented itself. Here was he drunk in a gambling hell on the eve of his marriage with Mary, and Rube had come back.

"What did you say?" he muttered.

"I said Rube and I had come back. But don't let me disturb the game."

"The game is up!" cried Paul, with an oath, as he struck the table and made the money jingle.

"Had bad luck, eh?" said Bill. "Sorry for you."

"Keep your sorrow to yourself and your partner, Reuben Halse."

"Come, come," said Bill good humoredly, "have a drink. I'm standing treat, and, as to Rube, here's his health and Mary's."

"I'm standing treat!" shouted Paul, springing up. "Have a drink with me!" And with this he flung his liquor in Bill's face and made a rush at him.

A pistol flashed, a pale blue puff of smoke died in the hot air, and Beauty Paul lay stone dead on Ffolliott's floor.

Some of them went up to the postoffice to break the news to Mary. There was a light in the window, and by it they saw Rube and she sitting talking. Quietly and with bowed heads they left the cottage and returned to Ffolliott's without fulfilling their mission.

Next day a rough and ready jury, having considered all the circumstances of the case and with due appreciation of Bill Redfern's prowess as a dead shot, decided that Paul had courted on purpose a certain death, and they returned a verdict of "suicide while of unsound mind."—Chicago Times.

Bass Cheeks a New Delicacy.

Bass cheeks are the latest gastronomical London novelty. They do not figure on cafe menus yet, and are found only at the most gorgeous private dinners. This dish is very expensive, because it takes about a ton of bass to furnish a small dish of cheeks. The cheek of a bass is a tiny nugget of the tenderest and most delicately flavored meat, found in the lower part of the head on either side. This is lifted out and the remainder of the bass is tossed away.—New York World.

SWIMMING IN SAMOA.

How the Dusky Kanaka Maidens Enjoy Themselves at Christmas.

Existence in Samoa is something different from what is understood by "real life." Each village has a chief maiden sacred as a queen bee, very beautiful and attended by dwarfs and hunchbacks, as in the fairy tales. There are also water fairies. Here is an account of them on Christmas morning, from a lady's book on "In Stevenson's Samoa:" "As soon as we arrived all Lau Lil's cousins and nieces, who happened to be visiting her, came rushing down from the house, and in a minute had shaken off their pretty holiday dresses and wound bright colored lavas round their bodies with such cunning and art that no matter how strongly the river might be running, or in what vicissitudes they might find themselves, the utmost decorum and propriety were maintained. Soon the fun began, pretty, bright eyed, brown skinned girls climbing up on the branch of a huge tree and turning somersaults, one after another, into the deep, rushing river below.

"They precipitated themselves into the water every way, except head foremost, with which method they were enchanted, and asked us again and again to repeat our diving. And they worked hard trying to do likewise, but always turned somersault or made some gyration infinitely more difficult in their efforts to take an ordinary dive. There was great laughter and merrymaking at these water pranks. Sometimes one would catch a large prawn and pursue another in the water, holding up the monster, with its great antennae stretching out eight inches or more.

"This morning Lau Lil suggested we should try who could sit longest on the bottom of the river. None of us could stay down at all. Then our hostess disappeared below. When the water cleared, we could see her calmly sitting on the shingle and twisting her masses of black curling hair on the top of her head. It seemed an age to us spectators before she rose and came smiling to the surface, not the least disturbed or out of breath, and when asked how she did it answered:

"'Oh, I just put big stone in my lap.'"

THE FOLLIES OF FASHION.

Men as Reckless as Women In the Matter of Healthful Clothing.

Leaving out of the question for the present the costume of women, we may call attention to that of man. At the present time it is the fashion to leave the chest more exposed than any other part of the body. In the front the waistcoat is open over the lower part of the throat and in place of being made of uniform thickness at the back there is only a mere lining.

But the exposure is much worse when man assumes evening dress. During the daytime when a man is going about in the open air on his business or pleasure he wears thick woolen clothes, with stout boots and warm socks or stockings. At night he puts on very thin clothes, a vest which is positively no protection whatever, very thin shoes, possibly silk stockings, relinquishes his gaiters and goes out in the open air without the possibility of efficient protection on his way to a concert, a theater or a dinner party, and then, as our contemporary The Lancet says, congratulates himself that he is not as those silly women who go about with the upper part of their chests bare.

Speaking with medical authority, The Lancet adds:

"We are certain, however, that men catch cold from wearing evening dress far more than women do, and it behooves all who go out in the evening to keep the legs and feet warm as well as the upper part of the body and to wear an extra vest to make up for the practical disappearance of the waistcoat."

There is no denying the absolute truth of these very sensible remarks. The follies of fashion are not confined to women, and consequently both sexes have to pay the penalty for indulging in them.—London Queen.

Old Japanese Timepieces.

Both Japan and China have long since well earned the sobriquet of the "Lands of Opposites," and they are just as "opposite" in the matter of timepieces as anything else. The Japanese have two styles of clocks—the so called "long clock," with hands fastened to a slide regulated by a descending weight which marks time on a long, narrow, upright dial, and the "round clock," with stationary hands and movable dial. In case of the "long clock" it is necessary to "set" it according to the varying lengths of the days, and for this purpose six dials are furnished with each clock. These are lengthened or shortened according to the time of year, and some are made so that the pointer or hand also, which moves downward during the day, starts upon an upward trip as soon as the sun sets. All of the round clocks are provided with a spring attachment, which only needs to be touched at sunset in order to make the dial run backward during the hours of the night.—St. Louis Republic.

Etiquette of the Table.

Although in America we have no hereditary aristocracy to dictate rules of conduct or what constitutes elegance of manners, there are persons of native refinement and good taste who have had experience of other lands and peoples who may be trusted as examples, writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland in The Ladies' Home Journal. These have their "shibboleths," their criterions of breeding, that are well defined. A man that takes mashed potato with his terrapin and orders a large cup of coffee with milk at the conclusion of his dinner may be a more worthy member of society, a finer specimen of mankind than the "gilded youth" of fashionable circles, but he would not be regarded as a man of refinement, hardly as a gentleman, by the privileged classes either here or in Europe.

The Catbird.

One of the most maligned of all birds is the catbird. Here is a case of give a dog a bad name and hang it. The popular opinion is that the catbird is a flirt, a thief, jealous and all that is mean; instead of that he is a beautiful singer, and most interesting and useful and helpful to other birds. Says Mrs. Olive Thorne Miller: "I saw one of these birds take charge of two orphans and bring them up. Another one I knew had built her nest in a honeysuckle that clambered about the trellised entrance to the house. If a cat appeared anywhere around, the catbird would fly to the window of my room and follow me until I had driven the marauder off the premises."—Philadelphia Ledger.

SEWAGE BEDS ASSURED

But Little Opposition to the Proposed System.

HOW THEY WORK ELSEWHERE.

The Ordinance Advanced to Second Reading and Ordered Engrossed—Allen Hazen, an Authority, Sets Aside the Fears Entertained by Dunellen Residents—Rev. Mr. Martine Discussed the Question From a Moral Point of View, and Mr Nelson Talked Sarcasm—Other Business of the Council.

The only opposition in the Common Council Monday to the progress of the ordinance authorizing the purchase of the necessary land for the sewage beds, was from a half dozen Dunellenites, whose voices and pens have been raised against the proposed system of sewage disposal for this city for the past year.

The residents of that little borough have become greatly agitated thereat and as a consequence sent this committee to the council to present the petition protesting against the establishment of the intermittent filtration system. A few minutes after eight o'clock the ran guard of the delegation wandered into the council chamber and pre-empted seats in the corner furtherest from the door. Here they set for a half hour, during which time three more of their friends came in at different intervals and joined the little cluster. They were having a conference of wise looks and whispered words all to themselves when President See called the council to order. Councilman Fisk immediately moved that the regular order of business be dispensed with and that the sewer ordinance be taken up for consideration. This was adopted, and Mr. Fisk followed with another motion that an opportunity be given to those who desired to be heard in favor of or in opposition to the proposed ordinance.

Rev. Mr. Martine, of Dunellen, arose and said that he had been requested by his fellow citizens to come to this meeting and oppose such action as was proposed to be taken. Mr. Martine said that the great trouble he had in speaking at that time was that he had been requested to come at so late an hour that he wasn't exactly prepared to talk effectively. If he had been notified some time ago that he was wanted to talk on this subject he said he would have brought along scientific arguments. But unfortunately for him and for his remarks, so far as having any effect on the councilmen were concerned, his scientific facts were left at home. Mr. Martine was resourceful, and so long as he did not have the scientific facts at hand he applied moral arguments to the question.

Mr. Martine had heard a good deal about the Framingham sewage beds, all of which had been more or less favorable to the system as proposed in this city. However, he thought that if he could investigate the beds he could bring home the worse side of them, and then a great many people would change their minds. The establishment of the system in this city, he considered, would be a nuisance.

From the moral point of the subject he directed a question at the councilmen asking them how they would like to have their neighbors do the same to them that they propose doing to Dunellen. Mr. Martine closed his remarks by reading and presenting a petition from Dunellen residents protesting against the construction of the beds, on the ground that it would destroy the value of property, contaminate their water supply and do other bad and ruinous things. The petition had 372 signatures.

Alfred E. Nelson followed Mr. Martine. Mr. Nelson is celebrated as the man who has been writing the series of articles in The Dunellen Call in opposition to the plans of disposal proposed for Plainfield on Plainfield land.

From the start his arguments were sarcasm. He had talked along this line for a few minutes, when Councilman Frost suggested to the president that Mr. Nelson confine himself to a discussion of the merits of the subject. The president so suggested. This broke the Dunellen authority and advisor all up. He stood for a moment at loss for something to say. Just then he noticed that he carried a formidable looking document in his hand, which proved to be a petition from Plainfield residents who were following out the same lines of opposition as the Dunellen petitioners. He talked about there petition for a moment or two when he caught up the line of thought Mr. Frost had made him lose, and reiterated substantially what he has published in his letters. One of his new thoughts was that a man only needs a nose to locate sewage beds in a town where they have been established. Mr. Nelson concluded by presenting the petition, in which the signers ask for a tide-water disposal.

Mr. Frost said that since the sewer system was started the best of advice in every phase of work had been hired. By doing this the city had been able to steer clear of the costly obstructions and experiments which had characterized like work in Westfield and elsewhere. It was therefore along this same line that the services of Albert Hazen was secured.

Mr. Hazen was introduced by Mr. Frost and spoke as follows:

This question of getting rid of the sewage from our cities is one of the problems which is attracting the attention of growing cities, not only in America but in all parts of the world, and it is a difficult question, there is no doubt about that. One of the first, I think the first, method of solving it was to turn the sewage into the nearest water course or stream. That method of getting rid of the sewage in some cases is fairly satisfactory where the rivers are large and the cities upon their banks not too frequent, the sewage is carried away rapidly, and in case the water in the rivers is not used for drinking purposes below, there is no very serious effects from it. I might mention St. Louis, New Orleans and many other cities which discharge their sewage in that way.

There are other cities that are able to turn their sewage into tide-water. New York is a case in point, where the very strong tide from the North and East rivers remove the sewage with considerable rapidiiy and I believe there is no great complaint. In Boston where there are very strong tidal currents the sewage was formerly discharged in the harbor and afterwards grew to be a nuisance, and the city gave up that form of discharge some years ago and built at an expense of many millions of dollars a system to carry the sewage of the city down to some islands at the mouth of the harbor some six miles below the city, and in that way it is carried out to sea where it does not return and cause any offense.

In the case of inland cities and towns which are not upon large rivers other methods of sewage disposal are employed and other means have been devised to meet these cases. Among these, one of the prominent methods is chemical precipitation. This was used to a limited extent in this country. Worcester, Mass., where the sewage of about 100,000 inhabitants is treated before being discharged; then East Orange, N. J., a neighbor of these parts, and there are a number of other small places in America. In Europe the process is more extensively used. In the central part of England where the country is almost covered up with great cities, where land is held at a very high price, so that it is hardly possible to obtain ample, and where the land is not adapted to the work of purification, this process, at best, is an imperfect process. It removes the solid matters—but not the matters in solution—the germ of disease, consequently it is only adopted as a last resort where other methods of treatment cannot be used to advantage.

The other processes of treatment, the leading processes, are intermittent filtration and broad irrigation. These processes that I may consider as two processes, are really one. The principle involved in the two are exactly the same, the difference is that in broad irrigation the sewage water is utilized for the growing of crops, while in intermittent filtration is to treat the largest quantity of sewage with the minimum area without very much regard to crops. The principle is the same.

This is the process which is regarded as the best for sewage treatment the world over. It is very extensively used in Europe and has been used quite a good deal in this country. Berlin, with over two millions of people, uses broad irrigation upon sandy farms which surround the city, and upon a material which is not very different from that which you propose for use in Plainfield.

In the South of England broad irrigation is very extensive, and in Birmingham and other great cities, where, by chemical precipitation, the effluent is put upon areas of land which are so small they would not, in themselves take all the sewage of the city, this process is the best process to be employed when the conditions are favorable. And one by one of the cities that formerly used other processes have given them up and have substituted land treatment.

In this country the condition for sewage disposal are somewhat different from those of Europe. When Worcester was wrestling with its sewage problem nine years ago they sent their expert, Mr. Allen, to Europe to study the question, and he found the European winters—England, France and Eastern Germany, were less severe than in Massachusetts and he argued, and correctly, that the fact of the less severe winters in England did not interfere with the land treatment, and that was one of the arguments which led Worcester to adopt chemical precipitation instead of land treatment. It was a short time after that the State of Massachusetts wished to investigate the problem of sewage disposal on quite a thorough scale, so at Lawrence in 1887 an experimental station was established to investigate the various processes of sewage treatment. Experiments were made with broad irrigation and intermittent filtration and chemical precipitation. I had the good fortune to be the one to take charge of the work there and retained that position for five years and over, up to the commencement of the World's Fair. Experiments were made there with different materials—with gravels, sands, soils, to see what results could be obtained with the different materials, to determine the laws which govern the process and the general rules which could be used elsewhere. We found that the process of applying to suitable material could be successfully carried out through our winters. We found that under favorable conditions effluents could be obtained so pure that I have very often drank of them and then in preference to the water supply of half the great cities of the United States. I have drank of the effluents of the sewage in Paris and other European cities and have never observed any ill effects.

We found that while these excellent results could be obtained under suitable conditions there were other materials with which corresponding results could not be obtained. There are materials which will not purify sewage, or at least will only purify it at such a low rate that it is not to be thought of.

I have spent today examining the land which it is proposed to use for treating the sewage of Plainfield, and which is the subject of the ordinance now before the council. The land, so far as I have been able to examine, on the ground without making as yet a more thorough test as I should like to make and hope to make later, it seems to be well adapted to the purposes for which you propose. It is a sandy material, and the sand in places is finer than could be desired but it is not so fine as to preclude obtaining first-rate results from it. It seems that if care is taken in preparing the surface, looking after the underdraining, and various other matters of detail, that if this is done you may expect with entire confidence to obtain results from it that will be satisfactory.

In regard to the nuisance which may be produced from it I may say that with five years experience at the Lawrence Experimental Station where my office was practically surrounded by areas which were used for sewage purification — some of them were managed to get the best results and some under extreme and unusual conditions not to get the best results—I never observed any unfavorable effect upon my health.

At Chicago I had charge of the sewage disposal there. It was by chemical precipitation and more likely to produce odor. My office was in the same area building where the sewage was treated. As we had to keep open twenty-four hours in the day I had a sleeping room there.

At Berlin, a city having about one hundred times the population of Plainfield, the farms are in such good condition that they have located the convalescent hospitals and other city institutions around the farms, and I have never heard any objections on the part of the people from living there, and there is quite a large population—people who carry on the farms, etc., and the health of the people living on these farms compares very favorably with the health of the people living in the city, as a whole.

In Paris they irrigate the land almost up in the gardens, and in England the farms are repeatedly put in between the villages, quite close together, and I have been astonished repeatedly to suddenly come upon irrigation where I did not expect it.

Regarding the art of applying sewage to land, the land is always kept in such condition that the sewage soaks rapidly away and they grow crops on the land, and if you were not aware of the existence of disposal beds you would only think they were raising better crops there than usual.

We have in Massachusetts as a result quite a number of these disposal beds. The first of them was South Framingham, where the conditions are unusually favorable and which has been in operation with great satisfaction to all parties interested. The last time I was there one man spent a part of a day taking care of it, and the crops were sold for several hundred dollars—way above the expense of operation. Marlborough and Gardner have been put in operation more recently and are giving quite as good results.

I wish to assure you, gentlemen, that I think that your committee on sewers are on the right track; that they have selected a piece of land which can be used for the purpose which is intended, and so far as I had opportunity to examine is the best land for the purpose, and that I think you can apply your sewage to this land and treat it and purify it and see that it will not be the cause of any offense, and if carefully and properly done, with the management you will secure, it will not be any cause of offense to the people.

At the conclusion of Mr. Hazen's talk Mr. Fisk moved that the ordinance be placed on second reading. Mr. Frazee moved that the motion be laid on the table. The motion was lost, Messrs. Frazee and Moore voting aye. On motion the bill was ordered engrossed.

After this regular order of business was returned to. A number of petitions and communications were received.

The Plainfield Street Railway Company asked for franchises for running cars over the following streets:

1—From the present terminus of the road on Watchung avenue through Watchung avenue to East Fifth street, through East Fifth street to Richmond street, through Richmond street to Putnam avenue, and through Putnam avenue to Woodland avenue, through Woodland avenue to South avenue, through South avenue to the station of the C. R. R. of N. J. at Netherwood.

2—From the present terminus of the road in Watchung avenue, through Watchung avenue to East Third street, through East Third street to Richmond street, through Richmond street to North avenue, through North avenue to the city line at the Township of Fanwood.

4—From the present terminus of the road on Watchung avenue through Watchung avenue to Fourth street and through Fourth street to Grant avenue.

A petition was received from the officials of the First M. E. church asking that the council appropriate sufficient money to place the town clock in running order.

Councilmen Westphal, Frazee and Ginna were appointed a committee to represent the council on the general committee Fourth of July celebration.

The police department was voted $75 for the purchase of new uniforms.

The city treasurer was authorized to borrow $1,500 for current expenses; also $10,000 at 4½ per cent. interest, to be used in payment of sewer work.

SKIN GRAFTING A FAD

There is a little boy in Montclair, N. J., who had such a jolly Fourth of July celebration last year that he hasn't got over it yet. He nearly burned himself up with firecrackers and the wounds wouldn't heal.

The only thing the doctors could do for the little boy was to try skin grafting—that is, picking out nice, clean, fresh little bits of skin from people's arms and getting it to grow on the sore places. And ever since last Fourth of July the doctors have been doing this. It seems wonderful to relate that they have skin grafted no less than 11,000 little pieces of skin on him, and it will take 5,000 more to entirely heal the burns.

This little boy's name is Freddy Griffith, and he lives at No. 87 Forest street. His father, Mahlon Griffith, isn't a rich man. Freddy is twelve years old.

Like a good little, patriotic boy, he spent the glorious Fourth last year setting off fireworks, but he saved his choicest stock for evening. This consisted of a pocketful of red, white and blue cartridges which he intended to fire from a toy pistol. How it happened he has never been able to tell to this day, but about 9 o'clock that evening he put his left hand into his trousers pocket, when suddenly there was a tremendous explosion. All of the cartridges had exploded in his pocket at once.

His friends think that he must have forgotten a piece of lighted punk with which he had been setting off firecrackers and dropped it in among the cartridges. At any rate, the various explosives set fire to his clothing and he was terribly burned about the lower portion of the abdomen and body. His limbs were burned from the groin down to the knees. He was also severely burned about the thighs. The flesh was burned completely off the left hand and wrist. At first it was thought that the unfortunate little fellow could not possibly recover.

The first operation was performed in August last, and the Griffith home was besieged with men and women, boys and girls, of all ranks and conditions of life, anxious and eager to be operated upon for the benefit of the little sufferer. At that time Fred was not able to be out of bed. He lay with supports under his body in such a position as to keep the injured parts from coming in contact with anything that might irritate the burns.

The volunteers first bare their arms. Dr. Halsey then gives the arms an antiseptic wash, in order that every particle of dirt may be removed. It would not do for even an infinitesimal particle of foreign matter to remain on the graft when it is applied to the boy's wounds. This shows how exacting nature is. Then the doctor shaves the surface of the arm that he is going to operate on. By this means the cuticle is brought to its virgin whiteness and loses even its growth of tiny hairs. Then the operator takes a small pair of pincers, so delicate that the points can scarcely be distinguished with the naked eye, and with a quick motion raises a piece of skin. This he nips off with a pair of scissors.

As fast as he gets the grafts he throws them into a glass dish containing diluted salt and water, which serves to cleanse them and keep the vitality in them. The grafts range in size from one thirty-second of an inch in length and breadth to one-half an inch, but very few pieces as large as the latter have been cut.

While Dr. Halsey procures the grafts Dr. Case puts them on the boy's wound. The cuticle that has been grafted upon the boy has been taken from over two hundred persons. It became a very proper fad among the young society people in Montclair to contribute skin for the cure, and swell young women vied with swell young men in proffering their fair arms to be operated upon. It also speaks well for the health and vitality of the residents of Montclair that the physicians never found it necessary to refuse any volunteer on account of ill health, bad blood or anything else.

The skin grafting symposiums took place every Sunday and every Thursday. Now that the cure is so nearly completed the doctors only work on Sunday. Fred is now able to sit up in an invalid's chair, and during the operation is not under the influence of anaesthetics. When asked by a reporter if he will play with fireworks again, he said: "You just bet I will! What would Fourth of July be without fireworks? But," he added, "I'll be more careful next time."—N. Y. World.

The Uncertain Public.

"There seems to be a limit to the power of kings after all," said Emperor William, morosely. "I don't like to acknowledge that I'm vanquished, but I'm very much afraid I'll have to."

"What is the matter, your highness?"

"I'm a little bit disappointed, that's all. The Napoleon revival and the Trilby craze both prosper beautifully, but my Aegir fad doesn't seem to get along worth shucks."—Washington Star.

A doctor has discovered the curious fact that the skull of a man who has died from delirium tremens contains an alcoholic gas. A small opening in the skull soon after death permits this gas to escape, and it can be ignited, and burns with a bluish flame.

His Views.

"What are your views on the higher criticism, Doctor?" asked the inquisitive passenger.

"I am not a doctor," replied the ministerial looking passenger, "I am an actor. But as regards the higher criticism, I fully believe in it. The gang in the gallery knows more about a play than anybody else."—Indianapolis Journal.

FORESTS TURNED TO STONE.

An Insight to the Mighty Operations of Nature Which Produced It.

The Yellowstone National Park is called the Wonderland of America, and since the destruction of the New Zealand geyser area, it is, perhaps, entitled to be called the wonderland of the world, for within its limits the most varied of nature's workings may be observed. Its hundreds of hot springs and geysers, its precipitous cañons and rushing cataracts, its snow capped mountain peaks and mirrored lakes, making it of surpassing interest. The lover of natural scenery may linger long over its beauties and its wonders.

From the geological point of view it is also of great interest, for here may be found rocks that range in age from the most ancient of which we have any knowledge to those in process of formation at the present moment. The superheated waters of the hot springs and geysers hold a large amount of rock making material in solution, which is deposited about the openings of the springs on the cooling of the waters, and in this way building up a mass of great magnitude.

These springs and geysers are constantly breaking out in new places, often on the borders or in the forests of living trees. The trees are killed at once by the hot water, and on becoming withered and dry, begin soon to take up the rock making solution by which they are bathed, and thus to pass into the fossil state.

Conditions similar to these, or at least favorable to the preservation of fossil forests, appear to have existed from a remote time, for there is evidence to show that the fossil forests were preserved before the most active of the hot spring phenomena were inaugurated. These fossil forests are located in the northeastern corner of the Yellowstone National Park, at a place known locally as Amethyst Mountain or Fossil Forest Ridge.

This is really a mountain some ten miles long and rising nearly or quite 2,000 feet above the level of the valley. If it were possible to cut a section down through this mountain, as a slice is cut from a loaf of bread, there would be found a succession of at least fifteen fossil forests one above another. That is to say at some remote day, geologically speaking, there grew a great forest which was covered up by the ejected material from a great volcano, rivaling in size Mount Etna, that is known to have existed some miles to the north. The trees were entombed in an upright position, and under the action of silica charged waters were fossilized. The action of the volcano ceased and quiet was restored for a sufficient length of time for a second forest to be developed above the first. Then came a second outburst from the volcano, and this forest was buried and fossilized like the first, and so in turn have the dozen or more forests flourished and been engulfed.

MRS. CLEVELAND'S GOODNESS.

Mrs. Cleveland is very kind to all her old classmates at Wells College, but she is more than kind to those of the number who are obliged to support themselves. At the Pure Food Exposition in Washington last fall a classmate gave lessons in cooking. She was a guest during the ten days of the exposition at Woodley, the President's country place.

"The President's carriage," writes the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, "brought her to her duties every morning and carried her out again after the close of the exhibition at 11 o'clock p. m.

"Mrs. Cleveland was a regular attendant on the classes, which, of course, made them fashionable. The cooking room was decorated with flowers from the White House conservatory every morning, and nothing was left undone by the President's wife to promote the success of her classmate."

Miss Catherine Willard, the niece of the apostle of temperance, Miss Frances Willard, was a roommate of Mrs. Cleveland at Wells College. She has a remarkable contralto voice and supports herself by singing. While she was visiting Mrs. Cleveland circulars were sent from the White House to the society people announcing that Miss Willard would give three concerts at the residence of Secretary Lamont under the patronage of the President's wife, to which season tickets of admission would be furnished applicants upon the receipt of $10.

For several days after the sending out of the circulars carriages filled with fashionable women rolled up to the entrance of the President's house. A large audience greeted Miss Willard at her concerts.

Sublime Self-Sacrifice.

"I feel pale," sighed the fluffy girl. "But I am happy, anyway. You know that stingy little Chollie Tapetie? Well, he did open his heart enough to take me to the food show, and, of course, I sampled the samples. What are samples for? And after I had eaten this and drunk that and the other till I just couldn't stand any more we started home. Then he thought he saw his chance. So he asked me to have some ice-cream."

"And did you accept?" asked the sharp nosed girl.

Discriminating Wisdom.

A correspondent thinks he has discovered a discrepancy in the Bible because one verse says, "Answer a fool according to his folly lest he be wise in his own conceit," while another verse says, "Answer not a fool according to his folly lest thou also be like unto him." Solomon probably had in view the fact that there are two kinds of fools, each kind requiring different treatment.—Albany Times-Union.

THE BICYCLE RACES.

A Great Day at the Crescent's Oval.

NO RECORDS WERE BROKEN.

The Track Was in Good Condition, and the Atmosphere Clear, But No Fast Time Was Made—Baron Hand Lowered the Track Record—Cabanne Won the Scratch Race.

Though the track was in the best of condition and weather just hot enough for fast racing, the National Circuit meet on the Crescent Oval Thursday afternoon was not a record breaker. That is, it was not a record breaker among the contestants, but with the attendants it was. Over 6,000 were in attendance. Before one o'clock Park avenue was lined with a constant stream of humanity wending their way towards the oval, and as the time neared 2:30 that thoroughfare became one vast panorama of humanity moving on bicycles, in carriages, in carryalls and on foot. At the oval grounds the crowd surged through the gates in on to the grounds, and scattered about. The reserved seats in the grand stand had all been sold long before the gates were opened, and yet hundreds clamored to get in to the structure, only to be driven back into the open space around the track. By two o'clock every bit of seating room had been pre-empted on the bleachers, and those who arrived after that hour were forced to secure "S. R. O." around the upper end of the racing course. Old Sol shot out his scorching rays in a manner that will give the laundries lots of work. The thermometer registered 97 degrees in the shade, and what it was outside can be better imagined than told. People fanned themselves until they were exhausted, wiped themselves with handkerchiefs until they could wring a stream of water from them, and then—well some, more bold than the rest, said things that would have have been better if left unsaid, while others kept mum and just thought—and you know how much people can think when they are roasting.

In the training stalls in under the grand-stand the scene was one of activity. Here the racers, with the assistance of their trainers, were getting themselves into condition for the events in which they were to contest. The odor of witch hazel and various other muscle invigorating liniments were dominant. Some were just donning their riding costumes, others were coming in from the track where they had been practicing, others stood gathered in little clusters gossiping about their chances of winning and other phases of track talk.

The programme announced the races to commence at 2:30, but it was fifteen minutes later before they were started, owing to the delay in the arrival of the L. A. W. officials from the Milburn road race.

The scheduled events were preceded by Albert Shock, champion long distance rider of the world, riding an exhibition mile in 2:51 1-5.

ONE-MILE NOVICE—CLASS A.

First heat—Won by H. A. Sanders, unattached, New York city; V. F. Green, P. H. S. A. A., second; R. Behrman, Madison Wheelman, third. Time 2:41 1-5.

The riders started out at a good pace with Green in a good position at the rear. A. Garrigues set the pace with the rest well bunched behind. On the last lap, Bahrman shot out of the bunch with the rest following close behind. At the short turn E. V. Lorton of this city fell.

Green worked his way to the front and gained the lead by a splendid spurt, only to be be caught at the tape by Sanders, who won by an inch.

Second heat—Won by S. W. Johnson, Jr., Bushwick Wheelmen, Brooklyn; J. Nounenbacker, M. B. C., New York city, second; L. E. Blackwell, Jr., Harlem Wheelmen, New York city, third. Time 2:34.

J. H. VonGlalur, Jr., Harlem Wheelman, set an easy pace at the start with the other riders riding abreast. The speed was gradually increased until Johnson left the bunch never to be caught, crossing the tape in front of all the rest. Blackwell was close behind but was passed on the homestretch after a hard fight.

Third heat—Won by William Pearing, unattached, New York city; B. L. Johnson, unattached, Somerville, second; William E. Havens, Crescent Wheelmen, third. Time 2:51 2-5.

Havens started out as pacemaker, but soon fell back with the rest, and all loafed for the first two laps. J. Beckett tried to run away from his field but was soon caught and passed. P. Young fell on the short turn. The racers came down the finish like a whirlwind with R. Tomlinson of Plainfield, fifth.

Fourth heat—Won by C. J. Bird, Elizabeth Athletic Club; C. J. Carpenter, Elizabeth Athletic Association, second; E. W. Goff, Somerville, third. Time 2:35. J. M. Andrevette set the pace for two laps, but fell on the last. Bird won easily, while Carpenter and Goff fought for second place.

Final heat—Won by S. W. Johnson, Jr.; E. L. Johnson, second; C. J. Bird, third. Time 2:53 2-5. Sanders set a slow pace with the rest bunched, Green and Havens together. S. W. Johnson, Jr., made another of his long spurts and won the race easily. Green got fifth by a length, while Havens remained with the rear bunch.

TWO-THIRD-MILE SCRATCH—CLASS A.

First heat—Won by George B. Cobb, Jr., Harlem Wheelmen; W. D. McGurn, Harlem Wheelmen, second; George Rice, Star Athletic Club, Newark, third. Time 2:07. A regular loaf, McGurn leading them, only ended at the long turn on the last lap.

Second heat—Won by Elmer Hodgson, unattached, Lyndhurst; R. L. Afner, Allen Wheelmen, Philipsburg, second; E. W. Heyer, Bridgeport Wheelmen, third. Time 1:44 3-5. Another very poor exhibition of riding, except at the lap when a very pretty race occurred.

Third Heat—Won by L. G. Hoppe, Liberty Wheelmen, Brooklyn; C. B. Jack, Reading, Pa., second; F. B. Egelhoff, Prospect Wheelmen, Brooklyn, third. Time 1:40 2-5. F. F. Goodman and J. A. Baldwin led out at a fast clip and held the lead until the second lap when they fell back. Hoppe won by two lengths after a magnificent rush, while the Riverside Wheelman did not secure a place.

Final Heat—Won by L. G. Hoppe; Elmer Hodgson, second; E. W. Heyer, third. Time, 1:37 1-5. A time limit of 1:50 was put on the race, and the riders set a hot pace. C. B. Jack led, but was passed on the long turn by the three first men in a very pretty manner. Hoppe won by two lengths.

TWO-THIRD MILE SCRATCH—CLASS B.

Won by L. D. Cabanne, Spalding team; H. H. Maddox, Sterling team, second; W. J. Helfort, Globe team, third. Time 1:40. Cabanne led the bunch with Maddox following closely. After a hard tussle, Cabanne succeeded in leaving Maddox and won by a wheel.

ONE-MILE HANDICAP—CLASS A.

First Heat—Won by B. L. Jacobus, Montclair Wheelmen; Thomas A. Cuming, Crescent Wheelmen, second; J. A. Powell, N. Y. A. C., third; E. C. Johnson, Harlem Wheelmen, fourth; W. C. Roome, N. J. A. C., fifth. Time, 2:50. Roome started from scratch and after some good riding caught the leading bunch and secured fifth place. Cuming held second place for two laps, and managed to finish there. Johnson made a strong effort to outspurt the others, but was forced back to fourth place.

Second Heat—Won by Elmer Hodgson, unattached, Lyndhurst; C. B. Jack, Reading, Pa., second; W. D. McGurn, Harlem Wheelmen, third; J. G. Johnson, Harlem Wheelmen, fourth; Wm. M. McCutchen, P. B. C., fifth. Time 2:18 1-5. McCutchen and Havens took the lead and held it until the third lap, when Gregory went to the front and carried the bunch on, only to be dropped far in the rear at the finish. J. S. Broadnax, Harlem Wheelmen, fell on the far turn.

Third Heat—Won by J. M. Baldwin, Newark; E. W. Heyer, Bridgeport Wheelmen, second; L. G. Hoppe, Liberty Wheelmen, Brooklyn, third; G. C. Carpenter, E. A. C., fourth; J. W. Tilford, Riverside Wheelmen, fifth. Time, 2:16. E. A. Bofinger started from scratch, but could not overcome the large lead of his competitors. S. C. Crane led the pace, tor most of the distance, but fell to the rear in in the final spurt.

Final heat—Won by Powell, Jacobus second, Jack third. Time, 2:19 2-5. All rode their hardest and Bofinger from scratch could not overcome the lead. On the last lap E. C. Johnson, Tilford and J. G. Johnson fell and E. C. Johnson was seriously injured. Cuming tried hard to keep the lead, but the pace was too hot and he secured sixth place by two lengths.

ONE-MILE SCRATCH—CLASS B.

Won by L. D. Cabanne, Spalding team; A. I. Brown, Sterling team, second; M. T. Carter, Sterns team, third. Time, 2:38 2-5. Sanger led a rather slow procession which was brought to an end by a spurt by Cabanne and Brown. Sanger followed suit but was unable to catch them, while Carter pushed in and secured third place.

ONE-MILE HANDICAP—CLASS B.

Won by W. J. Helfert, Globe team, 100 yards; I. A. Silvie, Riverside Wheelmen, 120 yards, second; H. R. Steenson, Stearns team, 80 yards, third. Time, 2:10 3-5. M. F. Carter, 140 yards, and C. Gans, 160 yards, led with a rattling pace. Cabanne from the 20-yard mark tried hard to catch the leading bunch and did so, but the effort was too much and he failed to get a place. Helfert won by six inches after a tremendous spurt.

TWO-MILE HANDICAP—CLASS A.

Won by R. L. Asner, Allentown Wheelmen, 190 yards; C. S. Henshaw, Greenwich Wheelmen, Brooklyn, 200 yards, second; Geo. B. Cobb, Jr., Harlem Wheelmen, 110 yards, third. Time, 4:56 2-5. A. J. Riley, 240 yards, and S. W. Johnson, Jr., 250 yards, set a merry pace with W. C. Roome, N. J. A. C., scratch, as last man. The pace was too great and Roome gave up the attempt to catch the leaders. A little loafing enabled C. K. Granger, 35 yards, to catch up with the foremost bunch and then the riders closed up until the last lap when Asner won by half a length in an exciting finish.

It was next announced that E. T. Hand of the Crescent Wheelmen and the Spalding team would attempt to break the track record of 2:09 3-5 made by Monte Scott last Summer. He was paced by two tandems, the Beam Brothers and Goodman and Granger, alternately. He was picked up in good form and finished close behind the tandem. The timekeepers announced his time as 2:09 2-5, one-fifth of a second better than the track record.

NEW YORK TIMES WINNER'S RACE—CLASS A.

Won by L. G. Hoppe, Liberty Wheelmen, Brooklyn; R. L. Asner, Allentown Wheelmen, second; B. L. Jacobus, Montclair Wheelmen, third. Time, 3:33 3-5. Five riders started in this event, which proved a most disgraceful exhibition of racing. The first two laps were ridden at a four-minute gait with Asner pacing. Then at the last the riders finished in a burst of speed, Hoppe winning without trouble.

THE COUNTRY COUSIN.

Monroe Avenue Chapel Thespians Make Their Friends Laugh.

"The Country Cousin" and "The Bridal Wine Cup" were the titles of two dialogues given in Monroe Avenue Chapel last Thursday in an entertainment arranged by the Ladies Aid Society.

After a piano solo by Stephen Haff, the curtain was drawn for the first scene of "The Country Cousin". Miss Philips as the hostess and Miss Brower as her friend were seated together discussing plans for a party when Stephen Aldrich, the English servant, brought Miss Philips a letter which announced the coming of a girl cousin from the country. The hostess, knowing very little of country girls, decided, contrary to the advice of her friend, to write a letter to her cousin telling her she would be out of place at the coming party and therefore not to come.

The next scene represented the home of the country cousin, which part was splendidly acted by Miss Lottie Aldrich, with Mrs. Aaron Brower as her older sister. The letter was received and the two sisters were horrified at its harshness. Then the younger sister resolved to go, but in the most outrageous costume possible and with manners still worse.

The third scene was in New York again and at the home of Miss Philips. She and her friend were again discussing the party when Kate, the country cousin, arrived. Miss Aldrich's costume and actions brought down the house and completely horrified the hostess and her friend. But to add to their dismay, the servant announced a distinguished count that was visiting in New York. After another very laughable scene Kate recognized the count as Bill Jones, the butcher at her home who had disappeared. The supposed count exposed Kate's disguise also and, after declaring his real name, left for his old home. A general reconciliation then took place, after which Adam Neuman, as the father of the hostess, appeared and escorted his niece to dinner.

"The Bridal Wine Cup" was presented. It was in one scene only. Miss Emma Haff made a very pretty bride with Willard Haff as the groom. James A. McGee took the part of the bride's father. The other characters were taken by the Misses Philips, Mrs. Haff and Clifford Pierson. The bride was asked to throw aside her principles for once and pledge herself in wine, but before she would drink she told the story of her only brother who died from the effects of wine. The father and the husband both wept at the last and then thanked her for saving them from drinking also. Then one of the guests, Clifford Pierson, stepped forward and solemnly said that the toast should be drunk with Hood's Sarsaparilla, which purifies the blood, etc.

The audience departed well satisfied with the evening's entertainment.

Pleasant Affair.

The second annual festival given by the Fourth Ward Athletic Club in the T. A. B. Hall Wednesday evening, was a success, both socially and financially. Dancing began at 9 and was kept up until an early hour the next morning to the musical strains of O'Reilly's orchestra. The committee in charge was composed of P. J. Reville, President; P. J. Mack, Secretary; D. J. Kieffe, Treasurer.

THE BANK BURGLARS.

Three Noted Crooks Who Are Thought to Have Done the Work.

Joseph Killoran, Charles Allen, and Harry Russell, three noted and daring crooks and burglars, were arrested in New York Thursday on the charge of committing post office robberies.

The inspectors who made the arrests say they have indubitable proof of the guilt of the men, and there is not the slightest doubt that it will send them to prison, where most of them have been before. In fact they are known as clever "crooks", and it has been only recently that they decended to robbing postoffices. Their regular enterprise is the robbing of banks and there is a belief that they form the band which stole $22,000 from the First National Bank, a few weeks ago.

The men were taken before Commissioner Shield and held in $5,000 bail each for examination on Monday. They are now in Ludlow Street Jail. The three prisoners have been in New York for several days, though it was only in tne last two days that they were located. They took their arrest coolly and denied their guilt.

A Press reporter called at the First National Bank this noon and was told that none of the officials had gone to New York to attempt to identify the men.

FOR SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

Presentation of Reasons Why Women Should Vote.

As there is a lack of information regarding the effect of the recent decision of the Supreme Court (in the Vineland School Case handed down November 8, 1894) concerning school suffrage for women in New Jersey, and the voice which they still have at school meetings, we give the official opinion of the Hon. A. B. Poland, State Superintendent of Public Instruction. Mr. Poland says:

"The decision of the Supreme Court as to the right of women to vote at School Meetings was that under the Constitution women are not permitted to vote for election of members of Boards of Education. They may however vote on all other questions that come before school meetings, such as the voting a tax or authorizing the issuing of bonds."

It is also the law of the State that women can hold the position of School Trustee. (Laws of 1894; Chapter CCCXXXV, Part IV.) "No person shall be eligible to the office of Trustee unless He or She is above twenty-one years of age, and is a resident of the District and can read and write."

The women of New Jersey have exercised the privileges of School Suffrage for seven years, to the general satisfaction of all who are interested in the welfare of the Public Schools, and in the promotion of good order at the School Meetings, but since the decision of the Supreme Court was made, there has been a general disposition manifested on their part to stay away from School Meetings, or, if present, not to take part in the proceedings. It would appear that such course on their part was due in a large measure to the mistaken idea that their rights as voters were swept away by the decision in the Vineland case. To prove that this course is contrary to the wishes of those interested in school matters, we cite a paragraph from a recent report of one of the Boards of Education of our State, composed entirely of men:

"A matter which has caused the Board very great regret is the decision of the Supreme Court" in the Vineland case. "From the time when the franchise was first exercised by the women of this Township, there has been a decided improvement in the character of our meetings. * * * The presence of the women has had the effect of imposing restraint upon any unruly tendencies, and our meetings have been characterized by decorum and a strict regard to the rules of business."

It would seem that the women of the State have a peculiar and special claim to School Suffrage. The watchful eyes of the women should be upon the school, the other home of their children. No mother would wish to admit that her interest in her child ceases at the school door. Politics are beginning to creep into the management of school affairs in some places, and are threatening to do so in others. Will not the women of New Jersey arouse themselves to the importance of conscientious and wisely directed oversight of the schools? Let them attend school meetings and exercise the important rights that the law still gives them.

The women can see to it by their votes on appropriations that their children are not crowded into insufficient and unsafe school accommodations, that modern, well ventilated and well lighted school houses are constructed, that sufficient money is raised by taxation to maintain the the schools on a proper basis, and in this way that the women teachers who constitute nine-tenths of the working force, are paid adequate wages. True, the Vineland decision takes from women the power of electing the school officers who have the appointment of the teachers, but to supply the School Boards with sufficient funds to employ teachers of ability, is going some distance towards the achievement of the same end.

In order that the Vineland decision be not followed by others on the same line, or by acts of the Legislature which may take away from women the important school rights they still possess, let them above all, sign the petition for constitutional amendment, to be presented to the Legislature in June, and in that way seek to secure full school suffrage beyond the reach of danger, upon the same terms as men. In no other way can absolute safety be secured. Let women use all their influence with the voters in their towns and cities, with their representatives in Trenton in support of this important measure. Let them secure signatures from members of the several Boards of Education in the State, from all who are interested in the cause of education, from teachers, from recent graduates who are ever imbued with the importance of the cause. Let them not confine their efforts to the public schools. Get signatures from teachers and patrons of private schools as well. The children taught in the private schools are but a handful, compared to the great number of public school children enrolled in our public school system, and it is these children who will create the moral tone of the communities in which they live.

Exercise your present rights constantly, and in order to maintain them work as you never worked before, to obtain by Constitutional Amendment an assurance of safety for what you have and for the restoration of what has been taken away from you by the Supreme Court's construction of the Constitution.

Approved by the Executive Committee of the N. J. State Woman Suffrage Association.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT.

Delightful Opening of the Hillside Club Yesterday.

Plainfield never presented a lovelier appearance than it did Thursday, and the Hillside Tennis Club grounds made an especially pretty picture, decorated for the Memorial Day tournament. Although the temperature was above ninety degrees all day this fact did not dampen the enthusiasm of the tennis experts, although it may have dampened their costumes. The Hillside Club had invited four neighboring tennis clubs to send two expert players each to participate with six representatives of the home club in a tournament for the honors of the day and handsome prizes. The South Orange Field Club named C. A. Gould and Holcombe Ward; the West Side Tennis Club of New York, Hunt Allen and Robert Allen; the Jersey City Tennis Club, F. C. Ferris and C. Harmsbad; while the Bergen Point Tennis Club sent but one player, H. Howard; A. B. Wadsworth, unattached, was secured to fill the vacancy. The Hillside Club was represented by H. D. West, C. S. West, F. K. Fish, Jr., L. H. Fish, C. F. Walz and R. A. Beebe. Playing began at 2 and continued with an intermission for lunch until 6, with the following results:

Preliminary Round—Beebe beat Howard by default; Harmstad beat Hunt Allen, 8-10, 6-2, 6-0; L. H. Fish beat Gould, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4; Ward beat H. D. West, 6-1, 6 1; Walz beat Robt. Allen, 6-2, 6-0; F. K. Fish, Jr., beat Wadsworth, 6-3, 6-2; Ferris and C. S. West drew byes.

First Round—Harmestad beat Beebe, 6-3, 6-2; Ward beat L. H. Fish, 8-6, 7-5; F. K. Fish, Jr., beat Walz, 6-4, and default; Ferris beat C. S. West, 9-7, 6-1.

Semi-Final Round—Ward beat Harnestad, 6-3, 6-3; F. K. Fish, Jr., beat Ferris, 6-2, 2-6, 6-2.

When the time came for the final round to be played by Messrs. Ward and F. K. Fish, Jr., Mr. Ward was unable to play, the heat having been too much for him, and he proposed to default the match and accept second place, leaving Mr. Fish winner of the Tournament. This Mr. Fish preferred not to do, and proposed an adjournment, so that it was arranged that the final round shall be played at 4 p. m. Saturday.

The outcome of the day's playing proved very satisfactory to friends of the home club.

Clarence Hobart, champion double of the United States in 1893 and 1894, drove over from Summit and was an interested spectator of a portion of the tournament.

The teas given by the Hillside Tennis Club are always a success and attended by a large number of the society people, and the tea given yesterday afternoon was largely attended and very successfully carried out. The guests were received by Mrs. A. H. Atterbury, assisted by Mrs. Dr. E. Hedges, Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Miss Whiton and Miss Kenyon, who served tea, lemonade and cake on the lawn adjoining the club-house.

WON BY ONE BIRD.

George Squiers Outshoots Jack Benner by a Score of 18 to 17.

George Squiers again showed his ability as a crack shooter yesterday afternoon, when he defeated John Benner, of Fanwood, in a match of 25 birds each, at $50 a side, by one point. This is the third match Squiers has won by one point. He drew a hard lot of birds but notwithstanding this came out in good shape.

The score follows:

G. Squiers—1 0 1 0 2 0 1 1 1 0 1 0 1
2 1 1 2 0 1 1 2 1 1 0 2—18
J. Benner—2 2 1 2 1 2 1 0 0 2 2 2 1

Geo. W. Hand, editor of the Mount Holly News, attended the National Circuit meet in this city on Thursday, and writes as follows to The Press about Plainfield: "I found it to be the prettiest place which I have ever seen in this country. A wheelman residing in Plainfield is certainly in paradise, and your roads are all that could be desired."

REFRESHING COOLNESS.

Young Ladies Serve Ice Cream to Perspiring Humanity.

When the temperature is above ninety degrees, ice cream is especially enjoyable, and so it was at the strawberry and ice cream festival in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church last evening. The room looked very pretty with the artisticly decorated booths and the charming waitresses and other assistants. The committee in charge was chairmaned by Mrs. H. A. Pope, and her energetic efforts were seconded by Mrs. William Dunn, Mrs. Jennie Abbott, Miss Blish, Miss Bittenbender and Miss Flora Petrie.

The booths were under the direction of the following: Flower table—Misses Nora Williams, Edith Lane, Luella Mills.

Lemonade well—Miss Etta Blish.

Fan table—Misses Lillian Glenn, Edith Pruden.

Six booths representing each day of the week were filled with articles for sale appropriate to the day.

They were as follows: Monday—Miss Bond; Tuesday—Miss Kittie Glenn; Wednesday—Miss Nellie VanWinkle; Thursday—Miss Maag; Friday—Miss Estelle Bittenbinder; Saturday—Miss Lizzie Bittenbinder.

The committee was in charge of the kitchen, while the good things were passed by the following—Misses Eleanor T. VanDeventer, Grace E. Overton, Helen Boice, Margaret Cave, Evelin Searing and Jessie Pruden.

Despite the extreme heat quite a number were present and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

THE METHODIST SOCIAL.

Vincent Chapel Was Cool and People Enjoyed Themselves.

A good-sized audience was present at Vincent Chapel last evening, and thoroughly enjoyed the church social which was in charge of Mrs. L. M. French. The chapel was quite comfortable, making it possible for those in attendance to appreciate the efforts of those who entertained.

The programme was opened with a tenor solo by L. S. Bond, accompanied by Miss Sharp on the piano. It was well rendered and Mr. Bond's voice was very pleasing.

Miss Mary Luckey then recited "Awfully Lovely Philosophy", which was enjoyed. Miss Luckey is an elocutionist of no small ability, and she gives promise of being one of the best. Later she gave a very amusing sketch, entitled "How She Entertained Her Sister's Beau". She was obliged to respond to an encore.

Miss Alice Carroll sang a very pretty solo, that was fully appreciated. Miss Grace Carroll was the accompanist.

Dr. Barnes then announced that the programme was concluded and invited all to retire to another room where cake and cream was on sale, and his advice was that all purchase.

A neat little sum of money was realized from the sale.

WILL CONTEST.

Effort to Set Aside the Will of Sarah M. Adams.

Sarah M. Adams, a maiden lady, residing at Martinsville, died last March leaving considerable real-estate and personal property. She made three wills during a period of a very few months, and by the last one left all of her property to three heirs. There were fifteen heirs in all, and when they learned that she had made a will in that manner they opposed the admitting of it to probate, on the ground that she was mentally incapacitated to make a will; it was claimed that two years before her death she had an attack of paralysis, and was obliged to remain in bed in a helpless condition, and as a consequence was very forgetful. At times she was unable to converse intelligently and attend to ordinary business matters.

Those opposed to the will employed Reed & Coddington to file objections to it and yesterday it came up in the Orphans Court at Somerville. There was a very large number of witnesses on both sides. The case will probably occupy several days. J. A. Griggs of Somerville represents the executors. It is also claimed by those in opposition that there was undue influence exercised in the making of the document.

Electrical Experiments.

A. B. Clemens, formerly of Plainfield, and now of Newark, will make some electrical experiments for the members of the Junior Department of the Y. M. C. A., and their friends at the Association Building on Monday, June 3, at 7:15 p. m.

Street Improvements.

The excellent work that is being done on Somerset street by Borough Street Commissioner William Emmons is highly commendable. Yesterday the crushed stone was rolled down, and is fast getting in good condition.

TO RESCUE PEARY.

MRS. PEARY'S LONG SOJOURN IN THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

Six Months of Darkness, Then Days of Bright Sunshine for 24 Hours. Wants to Save Her Spouse. She Will Lecture in Order to Raise the Funds.

While the warm spring sun is brightening the land and making it a bower of fragrant blooms, it seems strange to think of any one being in the barren wastes of rocks and perpetual snows. But this is just where Lieutenant Peary is spending the month of flowers, and where, unless a ship is sent to his relief, he will be destined to pass one more year.

In July, 1893, Lieutenant Peary and his wife left Philadelphia for the Arctic regions and in the September of the following year the wife returned to her home in this country, leaving her husband to spend the winter at his camp in the North. This winter Mrs. Peary has been at the home of her mother in Washington, where she and her baby are still living, waiting for the return of her husband and trying to raise money to charter a ship and go to his rescue. In describing her experience in the Arctics, Mrs. Peary said:

"Our first voyage was in June, 1891, when we started from Brooklyn on the Kite. But it was July when we came to the shores of Greenland, and a very desolate appearance they presented. Not a tree was to be seen, only a sparse undergrowth of low bushes and a wall of harsh, rocky cliffs frowning down on the tumbling sea.

"Mr. Peary had been unfortunate enough to break his leg on the voyage and had to be carried on a litter to the shore, where we had a tent erected and lived in it until a kind of cabin was built. It was now warm, for three months of the year in Greenland are very pleasant.

"The strangest of the new conditions which we had to face was the long day, for from the time we landed until in the fall it was a continuous bright sunshine that flooded the fields during twenty-four hours. It was hard to go to bed with a bright light out of doors telling you that it was day, but we were obliged to get rest and would make our meal times just as if the day was regularly divided as it is here.

"In November the weather grew very cold and as soon as the water froze over the Esquimaux came over in their sleds. I must say that of all nations of the earth these people are the most benighted. There is no religion among them; they have no written language and no morality, according to our ideas of that virtue.

"Men trade off their wives as they would a horse, and obligations of a husband to his wife are unheard of in this land. If a man fancies another man's wife he will go and make an offer and the husband only feels complimented at the tribute paid to the charms of his spouse. I do not think that in the whole of Greenland there is a person who has ever indulged in the luxury of a bath, and you cannot imagine a more filthy people.

"The days began to grow shorter, and by the 26th of October the sun had disappeared for a six months' stay. We were left in darkness, and had to do all our work by lamplight.

"My husband's wish is to come back to America this summer, but I do not see how we can send for him unless we can raise enough money to charter a vessel. It is for this object that I lecture. Of course, I dislike to appear in public, but I think it is my duty to do something for the relief of Mr. Peary, for if he does not get back this fall he will be compelled by the giving out of his provisions to spend the winter among the Esquimaux.

"When he gets home I think he will resume his old post in the navy, for he is now simply on leave and really under the orders of the Secretary."

Mrs. Peary is a very young and handsome woman, with a well rounded figure, hazel eyes, brown hair that waves into a soft bang and a clear complexion. The baby is a pretty little thing with flaxen hair and blue eyes, and has for a playmate an Esquimaux girl of about eight.

Endowment of Universities.

The noble gifts of Seth Low, John D. Rockefeller, Leland Stanford and others to our great colleges and universities are examples of wise generosity that make the world think better of its rich men. If the rich are to get richer and the poor poorer as the world goes onward to the end of destiny, what better method of helping to restore the equality can be found or suggested than the dissemination of knowledge among all the people? The endowments of our great institutions of learning might advantageously run less toward splendid buildings and more toward free scholarship.

The noblest gift to any college in this land was the Prince-Greenleaf bequest to Harvard in 1885, aggregating over $800,000 for the help of poor scholars. We hear much of scholarships, but in reality the end aimed at is not reached. A young man must have a "pull," as we say in politics to acquire a scholarship. Gentlemen, make these scholarships more easy of attainment for the poor young men of the country. The bone and sinew comes from the backwoods. Make it easy for that bone and sinew to get an education and we shall become the finest race on earth.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Tribute to the Composer of "The Star Spangled Banner."

Two years after the attempted hanging of Garrison—on the 8th of December, 1837—this same Boston mob came together again, this time in Faneuil Hall, the old cradle of liberty, to put down a handful of abolitionists who had convened there to announce the killing of Elijah P. Lovejoy by the patriotic people of Alton, Ill. After the reading of the resolutions, drawn by William Ellery Channing, a storm of hisses swept through the house, and in the midst of the storm the attorney general of Massachusetts mounted the platform and began to denounce the resolutions. They were incendiary, he said; they were treasonable. Lovejoy had "died as the fool dieth," and the Alton rioters were a patriotic band, worth to rank with the "orderly mob" who in 1773 had thrown overboard the tea in Boston harbor.

Wendell Phillips was there. He was only 25 years of age and had never spoken in public, but now he elbowed his way through the dense throng and clambered up the steps of the platform. As he stepped to the front his manly beauty and perfect self-possession drew to him instant attention, and with his utterance a deep stillness fell upon the noisy assemblage. "When," he said, "I heard the gentleman [the attorney general] lay down principles which placed the rioters, incendiaries and murderers of Alton side by side with Otis and Hancock, with Quincy and Adams, I thought those pictured lips [pointing to the portraits along the walls] would have broken into voice to rebuke this recreant American, this slanderer of the dead. For the sentiments he has uttered on soil consecrated by the prayers of Puritans, the blood of patriots, the earth should have yawned and swallowed him up." Then, standing face to face with that mob, which had come expressly to break up the meeting, he poured forth a torrent of indignant eloquence which sent the crowd away enthusiastic upholders of the liberty that had been trodden down at Alton. Such was the magic of his tongue, such the remarkable power by which in a moment he could create a crowd of "orderly conservatives" into as many "howling fanatics."

This was the first brand that Phillips threw upon the great bonfire that was to be extinguished only in the blood of 500,000 of freemen. There arose an army of agitators, but none of such transcendent ability as Phillips. More even than Garrison he became the leader of the Abolitionists, and like the big gray horse that Rosecrans rode through his campaign in West Virginia, he always managed, no matter how rapid the march, to keep fully a length ahead of the remainder of the battalion.—Edmund Kirke.

Epigrams By Lincoln.

We cannot escape history.

Let none falter who thinks he is right.

If slavery is not wrong, then nothing is wrong.

Come what will, I will keep my faith with friend and foe.

All that I am, all that I hope to be, I owe to my angel mother.

There is no grievance that is a fit object of redress by mob law.

This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it.

I authorize no bargains for the Presidency, and will be bound by none.

For thirty years I have been a temperance man, and I am too old to change.

No man is good enough to govern another without the other's consent.

I believe this Government cannot permanently endure half slave and half free.

Gold is good in its place, but living, brave and patriotic men are better than gold.

This Government must be preserved in spite of the acts of any man or any set of men.

Nowhere in the word is presented a Government of so much liberty and equality.

Slavery is founded in the selfishness of man's nature—opposition to it in his love of justice.

If I live this accursed system of robbery and shame in our treatment of the Indians shall be reformed.

Understanding the spirit of our institutions to aim at the elevation of men, I am opposed to whatever tends to degrade them.

The reasonable man has long since agreed that intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the greatest of all evils among mankind.

The purposes of the Almighty are perfect, and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail accurately to perceive them in advance.

I protest against the counterfeit logic which concludes, because I do not want a black woman for a slave I must necessarily want her for a wife.

Phillips' Red Hot Retort.

The Rev. Dr. F. W. Gunsaulus, of Chicago, relates that he was once listening to a vehement arraignment of the slave traffic by Wendell Phillips in Philadelphia when a clergyman arose and said to the orator: "Sir, if you really believe these things you are saying, why don't you go South and save them?" To which Phillips replied in tones of thunder: "And you, sir—you profess to save souls from hell—why don't you go to hell to save them?"

Prohibition.

Drummer—Give me a glass of beer!

Connecticut Restaurant Keeper—Can't do it. It's ag'in the law; but here's some darned good up-country cider!

Drummer—No: thank you. I want to get only mildly refreshed—not plum full.—Puck.

Dear Sir—I am requested by the Board of Managers to express to you the feeling of satisfaction that we find in the condition of the Union County jail.

The management is in every respect admirable; the warden has shown himself at all times thoroughly in sympathy with the work. He is kind, humane, and in many difficult cases has shown good judgment and discretion.

This condition, in the opinion of your committee, is highly creditable to the county, and, no doubt, gratifying to the board.

An Unusual Occurrance.

A Plainfielder who was at New Germantown last week says that on Friday there was a vivid display of lightning, accompanied by heavy thunder, but no rain fell. An unusual occurrence was that a very large tree standing in the Lutheran Cemetery was struck by the lightning and completely shattered.

To Be Ordained.

A number of Plainfield people have received invitations to attend the ordination of Roger A. McGinley, of Fanwood, and well-known in this city, to the priesthood at St. Patrick's Cathedral in Newark on Saturday, June 8. A Charitable Man.

Stephenson R. Hope, janitor of the Bryant school, says that Old Glory did wave at half-mast from that building on Decoration Day, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Demise of James Conneely a Shock to His Many Friends.

The sudden death of James Conneely, at his home on Madison avenue, Tuesday afternoon, was a severe shock to his many friends. He had been apparently in good health, excepting a slight trouble with his heart, and Tuesday he remained at home. Dr. Fritts called in the morning and told Mrs. Conneely that there was nothing serious about the indisposition of her husband. He was called later but was not at home.

In the early part of the afternoon Mr. Conneely sent one of his sons to the First National Bank to make a deposit. As he was coming down the bank steps he was met by Walter Hetfield, Jr., who told him his father was dead.

Dr. Manning, who lives near Mr. Conneely's home, was sent for, but life had left the body when he arrived.

A widow and five children, three girls and two boys, survive him.

The funeral services will be held Friday morning at St. Mary's church.

Mr. Conneely came to this country from Ireland in 1864, and immediately took up his residence in Plainfield, where he worked for a number of years for the late John Taylor Johnston. Fifteen years ago he engaged in the liquor business, which was his occupation until death ensued.

Mr. Conneely was a member of the Exempt Firemen, and Catholic Benevolent Legion. At one time he was an active member of No. 2 Engine Company.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Sometime ago I was troubled with an attack of rheumatism. I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and was completely cured. I have since advised many of my friends and customers to try the remedy and all speak highly of it. Simon Goldbaum, San Luis Rey, Cal. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kansas, was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

I have two little grandchildren who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one-third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my housework. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn.

Massive Floral Production.

Mrs. E. C. Morse, of Chatham street, has a rosebush in her front yard, standing five feet high, which is a marvel of floral production, having at present 424 full blown roses on it, and unfolded roses too numerous to count.

School Days Soon to Be Over.

The children of Miss Fawcett's school and kindergarten will have their closing exercises for the year in the Park club-house next Monday evening.

IS THIS THE MAN?

Messrs. Runyon and Laire Think They Can Identify the Bank Robber.

In connection with the arrest of parties in New York last week who it is thought had something to do with the First National Bank robbery, Lawyer H. C. Runyon and W. R. Laire of this city went to New York on Saturday and visited the Tombs at the time the prisoners were eating their mess. Mr. Laire, after looking over the prisoners picked out a man whom he thought was the one who was seen hanging around his store for two days. His name is Killoran, and his appearance is now changed from what it was at the time of the bank robbery.

Mr. Laire will go to New York again to look at him when his general appearance will be changed to correspond with the way he looked when he is supposed to have been in this city.

Mr. Runyon also feels quite positive that Killoran is the man whom he saw in the bank during the noon hour when the package of currency is supposed to have been taken from the bank and who attracted the attention of Cashier Runyon and Clerk Vail with a lot of papers while his accomplices committed the theft.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube be restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destored forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

SUMMER EXCURSION BOOK.

The Most Complete Publication of Its Kind.

The passenger department of the Pennsylvania railroad company will, on June 1st, publish its annual summer excursion route book. This work, which is compiled with the utmost care and exactness, is designed to provide the public with short descriptive notes of the principal summer resorts of eastern America, with the routes for reaching them and the rates of fare. There are over four hundred resorts in the book, to which rates are quoted, and over fifteen hundred different ways of reaching them, or combinations of routes are set out in detail. The book is the most complete and comprehensive handbook of summer travel ever offered to the public.

Its 210 pages are enclosed in a handsome and striking cover, in colors. Several maps, presenting the exact routes over which tickets are sold, are bound in the book. It is also profusely illustrated with fine half-tone cuts of scenery along the lines of the Pennsylvania railroad and elsewhere.

Any doubt as to where the summer should be passed will be dispelled after a careful examination of the contents of this publication.

On and after June 1st may be procured at any Pennsylvania railroad ticket office at the nominal price of ten cents, or, upon application to the general office, Broad Street station, Philadelphia, by mail for twenty cents.

FIRST BOROUGH ELECTION.

Citizens of Fanwood Will Elect Their Commissioners June 20th.

The election of the Borough Commissioners of Fanwood, made possible by the special election creating a borough government a short time ago, will be held in the club house on South avenue on June 20th. Seven commissioners will be elected, of which two will be for one year, two for two years, and three for three years.

Crop Prospects.

In the weekly New Jersey crop bulletin of the weather service, the following reports from Union county are printed:

PLAINFIELD—All crops are doing fairly well, but grass needs more rain as the hot weather has dried up the ground. Fruit is in good condition and very little injury from recent frost is reported. Rainfall, 1.13 inch; highest temp., 99 degrees. JOHN NEAGLE.

WESTFIELD—Fine growing weather; warm, with sufficient rain and sunshine to force crops forward rapidly; red, white and crimson clover in bloom, also raspberries, blackberries and wild cherries. Heard a belated 17-year locust June 2d. D. C. CRANE.

Bothered by Flower Thieves.

William Palmer Smith, of Belvidere avenue, Netherwood, owns the piece of property, opposite his handsome residence on the same avenue, which he has converted into a pretty park. He has been much annoyed by persons picking the flowers, and otherwise making themselves at home on these private grounds. Lately Mr. Smith has placed several signs in the park, requesting that no flowers or shrubs be picked on those premises.

DIATHERMANCY, 95° F.

Class Exercises of Graduates at the Chestnuts.

EVOLVED THROUGH THE HEAT

An Entirely Original Sketch Written and Presented By Girl Graduates—The Scene of Action Was in the Coming Century—Knowledge Gained By Electrical Application.

They counted themselves happy who were so fortunate as to be invited to the class exercises of the graduates of '95 at the Plainfield Seminary on Saturday evening. Not a hint had been given that the exercises were any other than the stereotyped performances of such occasions, until the pretty programmes in blue and gold, the class colors, were put in the hands of the guests. They read as follows:

Diathermancy. 95 Degrees F.
Dramatis Personæ.
Mrs. VanHypotenuse, aged grandmother, Mary K. Whiton
Granddaughters.
Inductor Polarization.....Mabelle C. Phillips
Latifolia Cassiopeia........Bertha McC. Clark
Marionite Cassiopeia...Marion L. Henderson
Electra VanHypotenuse....Gertrude Haviland
Nineteenth Century Girl........Nancy Lawson
Time, A. D. 2000.

The guests gasped, "What is it all about? Dia!-Dia!-Thermancy!-Dia-Through-Thermal pertaining to heat!" That was the first clue that came to the investigating mind, with the remembrance that at the time this class of '95 was struggling with its exercises, the thermometer stood for days in the neighborhood of 95 degree.

The acting alone of this play would have been creditable, but in addition, the fact that the play was written by the class, made the entertainment worthy of the highest praise.

The first scene revealed a morning room in the house of Mrs. Van Hypolenuse, who attired as a venerable dame, gathered the morning news from a phonograph. Some hints of changes in the times were given by the accounts of balloon expeditions, the election of a woman President, and buildings 157 stories high. The phonographic communication was followed by the entrance of three granddaughters, attired in sleeveless, Grecian draperies.

While waiting for instruction from Inductor Polarization, the conversation revealed the fact that knowledge was no longer gained by the slow methods of the nineteenth century, but by the application of electrical apparatus to the fingers. instruction on any subject could be infused into the mind. The aged grandmother disapproved of the new methods and in a reminiscent mood told of her class in the Plainfield Seminary in 1895. She was the only survivor of the class. One had become a Sister of Charity, one had married the Czar of Russia, another had married a Chinese mandarin, and the other, after graduating from college, had written 700 books. A dose of instruction in mathematics was then given one of the girls, who recited glibly a lengthy geometrical proposition.

The harping of the grandmother on the friends of her youth creates a desire on the part of the granddaughters to see a nineteenth century girl, and Inductor Polarization is prevailed upon to call one from the past. With dim lights and weird incantations, accompanied with sweet strains of music, there is evoked by a loud explosion and effective red lights, a beautiful creature who declares herself to be a C. D. Gibson girl. From the tip of her white parasol to the hem of her gown, eleven yards in width, she represents the extreme of style and is a wonder to the simply clad girls of A. D., 2000. A book she carries excites their curiosity and she is persuaded to read from its pages. The story of Gallagher charms them all, and even the Inductor tries to finish the tale and learn the fate of the hero, when the reader disappears.

The last scene represents the young girls attired in costumes of the nineteenth century, which they have found in an old trunk with a book, which they are vainly trying to read. The efforts to master the contents are very amusing as they endeavor to do it with the aid of the paras-sol and the donning of a leghorn hat. Even Inductor Polarization fails to infuse the ability to read with his electrical apparatus. The entrance of the grandmother, who declares the book to be Gallagher, makes the whole party wild to learn the art of reading, and she proceeds to teach them the alphabet.

The class song followed and this was charmingly sung.

The following very complimentary notice was given Billy Keeler of the Baltimores in the last issue of The Sporting Life: "Keeler is on an even keel all the time. He just simply attends to business in an earnest, conscientious manner, whatever the others may be doing. Nothing appears to affect him. He is the most evenly balanced player that ever appeared on the field. Every day is alike, and that is of the very best. He is so quiet and modest with all his excellence that to praise him is a real pleasure.

PARSIMONIOUS UNCLE SAM.

Wants To Cut Down the Expenses of the Local Postoffice.

Postmaster Hetfield has found it necessary to issue an order that the carriers' window be closed at seven o'clock on Saturday evenings, which is a half hour earlier than has been the practice. The department at Washington has notified Mr. Hetfield that he will have to reduce the overtime bills of carriers, and the closing of the carriers' window is one of the means to that end which he has adopted. The department also orders that if carriers cannot deliver all mail on the last delivery in the allotted time they must return to the office and hold it until morning.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube be restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destored forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

BRIGHT LITTLE SCHOLARS.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF MISS FAWCETT'S SCHOOL.

The Pupils Show Careful Training and Well Developed Minds—A Large Attendance of Parents and Friends.

After the Christmas holidays are over, then the school children long for the summer vacation, and now to the pupils in Miss Fawcett's school and kindergarten, it is here.

The closing exercises were held at the Park club, last Monday, before an admiring throng of parents and friends. At one end of the room the pupils were gathered together. They were:

Willer Ryder, Mary Neal, Helen Adams, Virginia Hegeman, Sadie Howell, Laura Osgood, Grace Osgood, Arthur Reed, Harold Hegeman, Joe Osgood, Ralph Hallock, Neal Compton, William Barlow, May D. Thompson, Alice Barlow, Jessie Hockridge, Nellie Hockridge, Elfleda Dunham, Genice Hanigan, Evelyn Lock, Blanche Heideloff, Sophie Barlow, Louise Saunders, Ray Hooley, Mabel Hooley, Margaret Townsend, Ruth VanVliet, Mary Barlow, Edith Taft, Frank Lock, Martin C. Fawcett, Regie Fawcett, Charlie Lyman, Raymond Lyman, Sam MacDonald.

Shortly after 7:30, the programme began with a march by the pupils and a concert recitation of Scripture. A prayer was next sung and the school sang the selection, "The Roll Call," Miss Blanche Hiedeloff singing the solo part. Miss Lillian A. Force acted as accompanist throughout the evening in her usual excellent manner.

Then followed the recitation "Jerry," by Miss Eugenia Hanigan, and the French recitation "Le ned de fauvette," by Miss Laura Osgood. "The Chicken," a laughable little dialogue, was rendered in a delightful way by Miss Ruth VanVliet and Miss Mabel Hooley.

The kindergarten next showed their friends some of their many games, many of which called forth the laughter and applause of the audience.

Miss Virginia Hegeman gave a French recitation "Pigeon vole," which was loudly encored. This was followed by "The Reason Why," by Miss Margaret Townsend.

Miss Blanche Hiedeloff next displayed her talent singing in the selection of "The Merry Brown Thrush."

A very graceful and beautiful wand drill was led by Miss Eugenia Hanigan, at the close of which Master Charles Lyman brought out an American flag while he recited "The Red, White and Blue" in his most impressive manner.

That humorous recitation, "The Owl," was next given by Miss May D. Thompson, one of the afternoon class. Miss Alice Barlow, another of the same class, gave a piano solo.

A dialogue entitled "The Record of the Hours" was most amusing. Harold Hegeman made a splendid "Father Time," while Miss Sophronia Barlow played her part well as "Day." The "Hours" were taken by the following:

Ray Hooley, Louise Saunders, Ruth Van Vliet, Blanche Heideloff, Mary Neal, Joe Osgood, Arthur Reed, Ralph Hallock, Neal Compton, William Barlow.

"Les lunettes" a French selection. was recited by Miss Eugenia Hanigan.

A French song, "Le chant de l' ecolier," was prettily sung by Misses Barlow and Hiedeloff, and Masters Hegeman and Bartow. A recitation, "Whose Afraid in the Dark," by Ralph Hallock, and other games of the kindergarten, were followed by the little dialogue, "Playing Grown Up", which was acted out by Miss Louise Saunders and Miss Ray Hooley in a manner that brought down the house.

The drill by the school formed a very pretty picture, with the little girls in their white gowns moving about before the more brilliant costumes of the audience.

The dainty story of "Little Christel" was told by Miss Sophronia Barlow, and after the song "Good Night" by the primary department the exercises came to an end.

The audience was then invited to examine some of the work of the children, which was on exhibition in an adjoining room. Here were a number of drawings made under the instruction of Mlle. Clara S. Hellwig, which, considering the age of the pupils, were exceedingly well done.

North Plainfield is to be congratulated in having Miss Fawcett's school within its limits. Miss Fawcett is assisted at her work of instructing the children by Miss J. V. Harriott, teacher in the English branches, Mlle. Cillier, French teacher, and Mlle. Hellwig, drawing teacher.

The school will reopen for the fall term on September 12th.

FLOWERS PORTRAYED.

Successful Presentation of the Flower Queen.

PRETTY WAY OF TELLING A STORY.

A Vision of Floral Beauty, Set Off By Pretty Costumes, Jovial Faces and Sweet Voices—Large Audience in Vincent Chapel Who Were Nicely Entertained—The Participants.

To speak of June, instinctively calls to mind a vision of flowers; and so it was most fitting that the cantata "The Flower Queen" should be given in Vincent chapel, Tuesday evening.

On entering the room, the platform called forth attention by its great change; instead of the blank walls, it looked a perfect bower. Evergreens were artisticly arranged at the back and along the sides, while ferns and daisies decorated the front. In the centre, a chair was placed, but was completely hidden by a covering of roses.

The programme opened with an instrumental trio by Mrs. F. A. Pollock, piano; F. A. Pollock, flute; and J. S. Petrie, violin. The selection, Treisluitz Overture, Weber, was rendered in a manner to bring forth hearty applause.

The cantata opened with a chorus, "We are the Flowers," and then as the singers retreated from the stage, L. S. Bond, as the Recluse, entered. After his solo, "Here Would I Rest," a semi-chorus sang in the distance, "Rest Thee Here." In the duet, "We Are Nature's Artless Minstrels," by Misses Elizabeth D. Hooker and Lucie P. Davis, the Recluse obtained his first glimpse of the Flowers, and in his enchantment he sings, "Sing On, Sweet Flowers." Then all the Flowers appear and the question arises, who shall be the Queen? Miss Bessie Martin, as the Crocus, states her claim, but before it can be recognized, Miss Lucie P. Davis, as the Carnation, springs forward and denounces her as a pretender and declares she should be the Queen. Heliotrope and Mignonette, Misses Eleanor T. VanDeventer and Maud French, sing of their own beauties in a duet, and then Miss Philips, as the Geranium, and Miss E. D. Hooker, as the Sunflower, each claim the throne.

The Violet, Miss Cora Shepherd, and the Lily, Miss Gertrude Sharp, in a duet, add their claims. The Daisy, Miss Isabel Edwards, the Buttercup, Miss Emma Line, the Dandelion, Miss Helen Harned, the Rose, Miss Elizabeth Hooker, and the Tulip, Miss Carrie Mulford, each have their say, and then a chorus of Poppies soothe the rest of the Flowers to sleep. A good-night song and the first part is over.

In the interlude, another instrumental trio, Second Nocturne, Behr, was greatly enjoyed by all. The audience was also favored by listening to the rendering of that pathetic story, "Brier Rose," by Miss Mary A. Luckey. Miss Luckey is a pupil of Miss Addie Parker Jackson, whose efficient instruction added to Miss Luckey's talent, forms a most enjoyable combination, as was shown by the vigorous applause last evening.

The second part opened with a solo by Miss Hooker, with flute obligato by A. Pollock. After a good morning from all the Flowers, the question of the choice of queen was again brought forward. Miss Edna Harris, Miss Winnie Carroll, and Miss Hazel Martin told of the reasons why they should be made queen, but at last the question was put to the Recluse, and he was asked to decide. Then in the solo, "Tis Hard to Choose, Mr. Bond finally decided in favor of the Rose. After grand preparations, the coronation takes place, and Miss Hooker, now queen, thanks her subjects in the solo "Filled With Thanks."

And now the Recluse decides to return again to usefulness and contentment, and all unite in a finale chorus.

The costumes of the Flowers were very pretty, being trimmed with the flower represented by the wearer.

The chorus of Flowers consisted of the following: Misses Gertie Sharp, Cora Shepherd, Elsie Horne, Eva Jenkins, Alice Jenkins, Eleanor T. VanDeventer, Lucie P. Davis, Mamie T. Steiner, Mildred Terrill, Maud French, Edna French, Edna Harris, Reta Pond, Isabelle Edwards, Cora Harris, Carrie Mulford, Bessie Martin, Hazel Martin, Emma Line, Louise Norry, Winnie Carroll, Helen Harned, Corrinne Mulford, Edna Moore, Florence Simonds, and Miss Philips.

After the entertainment was concluded many of the audience adjourned to the church parlors, where ice cream and cake furnished a pretext to completely bankrupt the audience. During the evening a little excitement was caused by a bat who presisted in circling about the room to the terror of many of the gentler sex and the delight of the boys.

The most essential part of a successful entertainment is an energetic committee, and the "Flower Queen" seemed specially favored in this direction. The committee, under whose management the cantata was given, consisted of Mrs. D. E. Davis, chairman; Mrs. L. M. French and Mrs. J. R. Joy. The stage was under the successful control of the following committee: Mrs. N. Y. Hull, chairman; Miss Laura Mulford, Miss Susie Jackson, John McNorton and David S. Dunavan.

The other important part of the entertainment, the refreshments, were under the care of the following committee: Mrs. Noah Pike, chairman; Mrs. L. M. French, Mrs. O. L. Jenkins, Mrs. S. C. Baker, Mrs. C. E. Horne, and Mrs. Charles Rugg.

The waitresses were the Misses Alice Jenkins, Eva Jenkins, Mamie Steiner, Edna French, Maud French, Elsie Horne and Edna Harris.

Mrs. Metta Horton Cook, of Brooklyn, acted as conductor in the cantata, and to her well directed efforts much credit is due.

Miss Elizabeth Dwight Hooker, of Elizabeth, the soprano soloist, is the possessor of a very fine voice, which added much pleasure to the entertainment.

After the ice cream had vanished and midnight approached the happy crowd wended their way home—well pleased with the entire entertainment.

ANENT THE GOVERNORSHIP.

GOSSIP ABOUT UNION COUNTY POLITICIANS AT TRENTON.

The Suave Foster Voorhees Is a Busy Man—John Kean, Jr., is Dignified, But the Grass Don't Grow Under His Feet.

Mr. Voorhees is, without doubt, the busiest man in the Legislature. His mail is larger than any one else's and hardly a citizen who visits the State House, no matter what his race, creed or previous condition of servitude, but must shake hands with Foster Voorhees and whisper something in his ear.

Every crank who thinks he has a reform machine takes it to the Union Senator and bores him with his idiotic ideas, while every man or woman who thinks he or she has a grievance rushes to the Elizabeth man for redress. He never loses his temper and listens to all with a semblance of rapt attention at least, and although three or four may be talking to him at once, each one is impressed with the idea that it was to him alone the Senator was listening. It is not to be wondered at that Foster Voorhees is the most popular man in the Republican party.

That other honored son of Union, Hon. John Kean, Jr., was also on hand. He had no legislative duties to claim any of his attention and he let no grass grow under his feet. He was here, there and everywhere, now talking to this member, now to that leader, shaking hands with every one and assuming that air of dignity and wisdom which has done as much as anything to cause many to declare most emphatically that he will be the next Govervor of New Jersey.

COMMERCIAL PALACE TRADE.

Mr. Edsall's Business is Growing Steadily and He is Satisfied.

The first month in the second year of the Commercial Palace has just closed, which enables the proprietor to make a comparison throughout the entire establishment of the amount of business done this month corresponding with that of a year ago.

The result shows and increase of fully 75 per cent. Mr. Edsall has just put on a second delivery wagon, and will soon be obliged to add the third in order to meet the necessities of his increasing trade. Mr. Edsall says his expectations for the first year have more than been met, and he feels greatly encouraged to make still greater advances in the future. Plainfield people appreciate good things, and Mr. Edsall's remarkable enterprise is not an exception to this rule.

May Be Locked All Summer.

The New Brunswick Common Council has adjourned until next Monday night. The new bill in the Legislature affecting the deadlock in the Common Council may be passed over the Governor's veto and become a law. If this is so the Democrats threaten to contest. The Democrats of the Common Council will secure an order from the Supreme Court restraining the mayor from voting in Council. This will put the case over until next fall, and the Council will lie in deadlock all summer.

JUVENILES DEFT FINGERS.

THE SEWING SCHOOL GIVES AN ENTERTAINMENT.

The School Has Become An Important Factor, With Gratifying Results—Display of Exhibits.

The sewing school organized at Reform hall last February by Mrs. Geo. F. Opdyke has become an important factor, and the children have done excellent work. Miss Pessinger, the superintendent, has been faithful with the girls and the result of their labor is most gratifying. This was attested last Tuesday when a large number of people gathered to enjoy the excellent entertainment provided under the direction of Miss May Thompson. The children marched from the basement to the upper hall, and as they entered singing "Onward Christian Soldiers," it was an inspiring sight to all.

Mrs. Opdyke made a few remarks in opening, in which she explained the objects and character of the girls work. She also stated that the boys were being taken care of in the manual training department, under the direction of John Dalziel and Frank Patience, and that their work for the first three months was most creditable.

The literary and musical programme was then rendered as follows, frequent and hearty applause being accorded each number:

Speed On, choir; The Lost Child, Jennie Smith; Selfish and Lend a Hand, Erna Arnold; What Grandmother Says, Mamie Mehl; A Useful Possession, May Smith; Wishes, three girls; Song, Lillie Zeisz and Lena Mills; Blind Man's Dog, Tessa Gayes; Five Little Chickens, Carrie Weiss; Contentment, Leah Hammond; He Did n't Think, Clyde Slater; acting charade, six girls; song, Sunny Land, three girls; tableau, Sewing School; The School Ma'am, Cathie Riker; song, And He Whistled Up a Tune, Jennie Smith; Baby Brother, Julia Grisly; The Leaves in the Wind, Grace Murphy; song, Helen Geider; dialogue, The Several Kinds of Girls; piano solo, Jennie Smith; Mary's Little Lamb, Mamie Filper; Little, Oh Dear, Annie Holder; song, Laura Anderson; Some Little Drops of Water, Mandeline MacIntyre; When Mamma Was a Little Girl, Gertrude Coddington; Why Pearlie Cried, Edna Kennedy and Lillie Conover; How Lulu Takes Care of Kitty, Daisy Bogart; The Inventor's Wife, Dottie Anderson; Wildwood Flowers, choir girls; The Queer Scholar, Marian Englehart; How Should Little Maidens Grow, Sadie Sweeney; piano solo, Laura Anderson; tableau, The Distant Star, Miss C. A. Dunlap.

Those present then went down stairs and examined the work of the past few months, and were highly pleased. After books had been presented to each class, the happy event came to an end until next fall.

FAREWELL RECEPTION OF GRADUATES AT THE CHESTNUTS.

The Class of '95, for the last time, gathered with their friends at the Seminary last Tuesday. The guests were received in the drawing room by Miss Kenyon and Miss Arnold, assisted by the graduates, Misses Gertrude Haviland, Marion Henderson, Mary Whiton and Mabelle Phillips. The guests were again welcomed by Miss Clark and Miss F. E. Kenyon in the dancing hall, when, until past twelve o'clock, all enjoyed the friendly chat, good floor, and fine music furnished by Professor Conde. L. VanBuren was floor manager.

JUSTICE CAUGHT NAPPING.

Judge Irving Signed His Own Death Warrant for a Dollar.

A prominent lawyer of New Jersey tells a story of New York city judges of forty years ago that always fetches a smile. Judge John T. Irving, the upright and conscientious brother of Washington Irving, is the hero of the alleged incident. It occurred in the days when judges received a fee of $1 for every paper they signed.

One day two prominent New York lawyers, so the story runs, were in Judge Irving's court when he was busily engaged in signing papers. There was a long line of lawyers filing slowly in front of his desk, and as each passed up his papers he at the same time laid down a corresponding number of dollars. The judge would glance at the papers, make a scrawl on each and take up the next package, the pile of greenbacks growing steadily as the line of lawyers thinned out. One of the two lawyers looking on said to his companion:

"I have the highest respect for the judge's integrity, but I'm satisfied he doesn't know half the time what he is signing. Why, watch him. It is impossible for him to get half of an idea of what is on the paper. If he examined each one closely he'd never get done; but he should be more careful, nevertheless."

The other lawyer declared the judge caught at a glance the important sentence or phrase of each.

"Well, I don't believe it," exclaimed the other. "I feel sure. in spite of better intentions. that that one dollar fee acts as incentive and causes his honor to slight his work, and I'm going to prove what I say."

With that he strode out of the room, and presently returned with a legal form signed by the sheriff, and which set forth that on such and such a day and at a certain hour and in a certain place, Irving was to be hanged by the neck until he should be dead. The lawyer then took his place in the line filing before the judge's desk. When it came his turn he held up the paper, folded between his fingers in a nonchalant manner, and laid down his $1 with the other hand.

His honor unfolded his paper and hurriedly plunged his pen. in the ink. There was a splutter and a scrawl, and Judge Irving had signed his own death warrant. That night the lawyer went to a social gathering, which Judge Irving was to attend, with the death warrant in his pocket. When he found himself in a corner with the judge he said:

"Judge, I was watching you signing papers to-day and I couldn't for the life of me understand how you can read them all. Do you really read them?"

"Why, certainly. It's a matter of habit, you know. I have acquired it by years of practice. I can at a glance detect the really important sentence or word."

"Well," said the lawyer, producing the death warrant and folding it in such a manner that the name of Judge Irving only was visible, "is that your signature?"

The judge put on his glasses, stared at the paper an instant, and then declared it was his signature. The lawyer then unfolded the paper and handed it to the judge. The latter read it and turned crimson.

After that the signing of papers in Judge Irving's court was as long and tedious a process as it had been rapid and careless before.

FASHION IN FIJI.

It Gives as Much Concern to the Ladies There as Elsewhere.

Fijian women have a most affectionate disposition, although, like all semi-civilized people, they are extremely sensitive and ready to take offense at the veriest trifles. Their skins are usually of a bright dark brown, smooth and glossy as polished marble, and many, while young, possess handsome features and most symmetrical forms; but unfortunately their natural grace speedily disappears after marriage—at least among the common people, who have no attendants to relieve them in the heavier duties of the household. While unmarried their hair, picturesquely adorned with hibiscus and other flowers, is permitted to fall in thin plaits down the back of the neck. This is regarded as a sign of maidenhood. After marriage the plaits are cut off and not allowed to be worn again.

In Suva and Levuka the women generally wear a blouse shaped pinafore of thin white cotton; but in their homes or in the interior districts they are content with the sulu, a kind of loin cloth made from the bark of the native mulberry tree, and wrapped two or three times round the body. The manufacture of this cloth, called tappa, is one of the leading industries in Fiji, the bark being beaten with wooden mallets into thin sheets, which are joined together as required. When taking part in the meke-meke, or native dance, the girls wear a short, thick petticoat of dried grass, adorned with black and yellow tappa streamers, the bodies remaining bare from the waist upward. The hair is decorated with flowers and frequently frizzed and plaited in a fashion somewhat resembling that depicted in Assyrian sculptures.

WITTY SAYINGS.

Unique Entertainment at the First Presbyterian Church.

Witty sayings are usually enjoyed when read, but to have them acted out is a new departure in the line of entertaining, but such was the programme at the Christian Endeavor sociable held in the First Presbyterian church last evening. After allowing their audience time to get settled, the folding doors into one of the class-rooms were opened, and the first of the scenes shown. Their titles were as follows:

They were religious; Very, very funny; The day after Christmas; Why she named her Japan; A modern tongue; Frank, but not flattering; A complex question; A difficult lesson; Seeking information; A difficult combination; Snapped up; Fake Prodigy; Wild enough for anything.

A piano duet by Misses Flora Petrie and Olive Newell was thoroughly enjoyed during one of the intermissions.

After the entertainment had closed, the committee passed ice-cream and cake, while all tried to become better acquainted with each other. The enterprising social committee consisted of Mrs. Remson, Misses Mary Luckey, Edith Pruden, Margaret Cave, Helen Boice, Pansy Herring, Emma Havens, Margaret Vermeule, Evelin Searing, Mrs. Fraley, Miss Abbott, Guernsey Nevins and Frank Flannery, and all deserve great credit for the novel and most pleasing entertainment they provided, and the excellent manner in which the evening passed off.

Marriage of Miss Goddard.

The marriage of Miss Elizabeth W. Goddard of Newton Centre, Mass., to Daniel A. Heald, of Orange, occurred Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock at the home of the bride. Miss Goddard is a sister of G. H. Goddard, of East Ninth street. Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Goddard attended the wedding, and will return home tomorrow, enroute they will stop at Amherst to see their son, Frederick, who is a student at Amherst college.

Trolley Preachers.

The trolley has been put to a new use in Passaic county. On Monday night a part of men and women connected with the Passaic Street Mission in Passaic, chartered an electric car on the New Jersey Electric Railway, and went by way of Paterson to Singac and back. Wherever they saw a group of people on the sidewalks or rural roadsides the car was stopped, and the evangelists sang hymns and exhorted the bystanders to seek salvation.

Would Make a Nice Showing.

Manager Mills of the United States Express company is desirous that the company be represented in the Fourth of July parade, and would like very much to secure the use of the United States Express company's handsome wagon that was on exhibition at the World's Fair. As soon as Mr. Mills is assured that the parade will take place, he will write to headquarters asking that the wagon be loaned for that day.

A Double Funeral.

Two very sad deaths occurred at Passaic this week. They were Rebecca and Anna Newman, both sisters, the latter dying on Tuesday and the former yesterday. Both young ladies are well known in Plainfield and their friends will be grieved to hear of their demise. They were active church workers who led exemplary Christian lives. The double funeral will be held Sunday.

Too True.

An exchange says: "If a doctor makes a mistake, he buries it; if a merchant makes a mistake, he never tells it; if a lawyer makes a mistake, he crawls out of it; but if an editor makes a mistake, he puts it on a sheet of paper for the world to look at."

The Census Workers.

Miss Eudora Grant is now busily engaged in the City Assessor's office copying the results of the census enumerators. It will probably be two weeks before the latter conclude their work.

Rahway is talking about celebrating the glorious Fourth. Rahway patriotism should be corked up and sent over to Plainfield, where it can perform the function of being an echo to the thunderous siz bangs of Plainfield's fire-crackers.

CYCLING COMMENT.

For violating rules Jay Eaton, of Elizabeth, has been declared a professional by the L. A. W. racing board.

Charley Murphy has not given up the idea of trying a mile straightway with an engine as pacemaker. Yesterday he said he hoped to be able to complete the arrangements before the week is over.

Will R. Pitman, the veteran wheelman of this country, suggests that at the national meet of the L. A. W. to be held at Asbury Park, the veterans of the League of American Wheelmen lead the parade on the old ordinary wheels.

A match race between Arthur A. Zimmerman and John S. Johnson, the professional wheelmen, seems likely to take place this season, in spite of Zimmerman's recent refusal to meet Johnson. The latter's challenge to meet all comers, Zimmerman in particular, in a series of races for the world's championship, has finally resulted in Zimmerman agreeing to ride Johnson a series of match races for a $5,000 purse.

It has been decided that Walter Sanger and Charles W. Murphy will ride a series of match races, best two out of three one-mile heats, at Manhattan Beach on Saturday, June 29th. The race will be held under the auspices of the Kings County Wheelmen. C. M. Murphy recently lowered the one-mile competition record, and is consequently looked upon as a winner, as Sanger is reported to be in poor shape.

The Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen have called a special meeting of the club to be held next Wednesday evening. It will be an important meeting from the fact that the committee appointed to secure new club quarters will make a report and some action taken toward that end. The treasurer will also make a report on the Decoration Day meet, and plans for the Fourth of July celebration will be discussed.

W. H. Beegle, chairman of the Race Committee of the National bicycle meet to be held at Asbury Park in July, has received the following telegram from Tom Eck, Johnson's manager, relative to the challenge issued by Zimmerman, champion bicyclist of the world: "Johnson will hold Zimmerman to his challenge, per American Wheelmen. I posted forfeit in good faith. Zimmerman not posted his money and challenge for $5,000 is unreasonable. Will not ride at Asbury Park." Zimmerman has declared all along that he will not race for less than $5,000 a side. Why Johnson will not race at Asbury Park is something prominent wheelmen can not understand, as the track is one of the best in the country. The Race Committee will confer with Zimmerman, tonight.

The action of the League of American Wheelmen in expelling John S. Johnson, the Minneapolis racer, from the amateur ranks and allowing other class B riders to continue in the amateur ranks is being severely condemned by members of the organization.

It is the unanimous opinion that at least eight of the leading racing men riding under the auspices of the L. A. W. are equally as guilty as Johnson of violation of the amateur rules, and that their expulsion must speedily follow or else the Racing Board of the league will be bound to offer some explanation of its conduct in taking action upon the Johnson case and allowing the other riders to continue in the L. A. W.

The Board of Education are advertising for sealed proposals from coal dealers to furnish necessary fuel for the public schools during the coming year. The Board reserve the right to reject any or all bids. The Board should reject all bids received from dealers who are not residents of this city, even though some may be lower than those that may be submitted by the home merchants. Last year the contract for supplying coal was awarded to an out-of-town firm, which was a manifest injustice to the coal dealers of this city who pay taxes here and whose expenditures materially help Plainfield's prosperity. The policy of going out of town to buy coal for the sake of saving a few dollars is not a good one. Let Plainfield dealers supply the fuel for Plainfield schools.

In the case of Benny versus O'Brien the court reversed the opinion of the court below and laid down the principal that children born in the United States of parents domiciled here, are citizens of the United States whether such parents are naturalized or not, except in case the children are born of parents in the diplomatic service. This case grew out of the councilmanic election in Bayonne in which Benny, who was born in this country of unnaturalized parents, was declared elected by one vote over O'Brien, a naturalized citizen. O'Brien contested Benny's legal right to hold office and in the Hudson County Court and Justice Lippincott decided that Benny was not an American citizen and therefore not eligible to the office. This opinion is reversed by this last decision.

A PASTOR BICYCLED.

Rev. Mr. McKelvey's Congregation Make Him a Present.

A reception and a surprise were given to Rev. J. O. McKelvey of Warren chapel by the Ladies Aid society of that chapel on Thursday. In the first part of the evening a programme was provided which consisted of a vocal solo by Miss Margaret Swain, a recitation by Miss Teal, and a vocal solo by Miss F. May Grant. Then L. N. Lovell, the superintendent of the Sunday-school, arose and in a few appropriate words presented Mr. McKelvey with $10 to apply to the purchase of a bicycle. A reply in Mr. McKelvey's usual witty manner followed, after which Miss Grant sang another selection.

The rest of the evening was given up to sociability and conversation while light refreshments were passed by the committee. A large number attended.

FATAL BURNING ACCIDENT.

A Bright Little Boy Loses His Life in a Sad Way.

A fatal burning accident, in which the bright three-year-old son of Charles VanPelt, a farmer living near Union Valley, lost his life, occurred Wednesday morning.

Mrs. VanPelt left the child alone in the house for a few minutes, while she went out into the garden to pick some strawberries. After she left the house it is supposed the little one commenced playing around the stove, and in some manner his clothes became ignited. His father was attracted by the screams of the child and rushing to where he was, found his clothes to be enveloped in a mass of flames. With the assistance of an older son Mr. VanPelt finally succeeded in extinguishing the flames, but not until the child had been horribly burned about the arms and body. Dr. Cory of New Providence and Dr. Jones of Basking Ridge were summoned, and they, together with the parents, did everything possible to alleviate the sufferings of the little fellow, but he was unable to survive the injuries and yesterday morning death ensued. The funeral was held this morning.

No New Temple of Justice.

The Passaic County Board of Freeholders held its monthly meeting Tuesday, and again dashed the hopes of those persons who are anxious to have a new court house built on the site, which the county bought three years ago, in the tract known as Colt's Hill. The committee on the subject announced "No report," and when later Freeholder Feurstein tried to force a test vote on the question, he was shut off by the passage of a motion to adjourn. The board's first step would be to apply to Judge Dixon, of the Circuit Court, for the appointment of commissioners, who, under a law passed by the Legislature last winter, would have power to bond the county to the extent of $200,000 for the building.

To Do Away With Grade Crossings.

The Jersey Central have decided to build bridge crossings in Elizabeth. The work to be done includes the depression of Jefferson avenue, Madison avenue, Catherine street, Spring street and Reid street. Division street has already been depressed, and Oak street is to be closed by the tracks. It extends only from East Grand street to Magnolia avenue.

There will be no arches over any of the streets, as the conditions will not allow of their erection, and in each case a girder bridge of iron, such as now span both Broad and Division streets, will be supported over the streets on stone abutments.

New Fancy Goods Store.

The store on the corner of Park avenue and West Second street, recently occupied by Martin Brothers, will be opened on Saturday, June 15th, with a full line of new and fancy dry goods. The interior of the store is being remodeled and redecorated and when opened will present a handsome appearance. The proprietor, Alexander Pargiter, is a pleasant gentleman, thoroughly experienced in this line of trade, and will doubtless build up a good business.

To Be a Happy Event.

Cards are out announcing the marriage of Miss Lillie Dunn Garretson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Garretson, of West Front street, to George Milton Macintyre, of the firm of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Co. The wedding takes place at the home of the bride, Thursday afternoon, June 20th, at five o'clock.

Went to Sleep in a Bad Place.

Frank McNulty, a laborer on the Passaic branch of the D., L. & W. R. R., was taken sick while at work on Wednesday, and sat down on a tie to rest. He fell asleep, and a few minutes after the Bernardsville express struck him with the result of throwing him into a ditch. He was lucky enough to escape with a broken arm and scalp wound. He is now at his home at Berkley Heights.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

A WOODEN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith Celebrate Their Fifth Wedding Anniversary.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Smith, of 407 East Second street, celebrated their wooden wedding anniversary last evening, in a most novel and interesting way.

Those present assumed certain characters of prominent men and women, and then then each guessed the character represented. Refreshments were served during an intermission, after which a "Library table" was enjoyed. Titles of prominent books were represented in detail, and the friends were asked to guess the names. Two prizes were offered. Miss Alice Phipps secured first, a silver atomizer, and J. Henry Smith, second, a silver hat brush. The presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Smith were chiefly wooden and very handsome.

The guests included Mr. and Mrs. H. Belton, Henry Belton, J. Henry Smith, Dr. E. W. Howells, of New York; Miss Smith, David Dibbell, Edward Hebbard, Mr. and Mrs. Bertram Smith, Mrs. Catharine Phipps, the Misses Phipps, Miss Mary Way, of Brooklyn, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Allen, of Yonkers; Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Taylor, of Roseville; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fisher, of Hackensack.

The invitations sent out were all written on tree bark by Mr. Smith, and the responses were almost all the same, and were exceedingly novel.

REASON ON THIS.

You would call a man a fool to try to run an engine with a crooked piston-rod. Yet you are attempting that when you live with your system in a disordered condition. Whatever you may be mentally, you are physically a machine. Nothing interests you more than keeping it in order. If your digestion is out of condition, or your kidneys are disordered, use Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, a medicine prepared by a famous physician, and tested for years by thousands of persons, who all endorse it

Union county has already furnished one candidate for Governor, who is Joseph B. Keim, of Rahway, nominated by the Socialists. But then he really don't count.

The abolition by the Legislature of the publishing of State laws in newspapers will have a tendency to make better newspapers, and this, at least, is something to be thankful for.

Plainfield is to have a grand Fourth of July celebration which will not only bear testimony to the patriotism of its citizens but will also keep them at home and attract crowds of outsiders. New Brunswick people, having no attractions to keep them at home, will go elsewhere to spend the day and their money likewise, and the city will be just that much the poorer.—New Brunswick Fredonian.

A newspaper report from Elizabeth says:

> Errors have been discovered in taking the census of this city by the Board of Assessors, and in one ward alone, the Ninth, a mistake of 200 was made against the city. The Board of Assessors will meet next Monday at eleven a. m. to foot up the totals, and it is certain that the population of Elizabeth instead of being 43,900 as at first estimated, will be between 44,000 and 45,000.

Elizabeth is evidently bound to make as good a showing, numerically, as the law allows. The Press does not want to be too bold in speaking of what the census, when finished, will show for Plainfield along this line of growth, because estimates, inspired by zealousness and pride for one's home, often prove erroneous, but the opinion can be ventured with safety that this city will make as good a showing as any other place in New Jersey. In fact, there is no question but what Plainfield has increased more in the last five years in property values than any other place in the State. And this is the real factor that counts in making a town what it is.

GOOD THINGS GALORE.

Four Church Festivals Held Last Night.

TRINITY'S LAVENDER AND WHITE.

The Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters Have a Beautiful Decorations, and Pleasant Attendants, All of Which Their Visitors Appreciated —Other Festivals in Grace M. E., Hope Chapel and St. Mary's.

From The Press of June 8.

The scene that greeted the eyes of those who entered the Sunday-school room of the Trinity Reformed church last evening was one of rare beauty. Anyone present could have told at a glance who were responsible for the charming effect of the delicate but substantial colors, lavender and white. The Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters, who by earnest endeavor have made a reputation as workers in His Name, probably never arranged an affair that was more perfect in every detail than the festival given last evening. The rooms were transformed into a parlor-like scene that was attractive. The whole affair represented earnest effort, and since it was planned the activity of the members has increased until last evening, when they were allowed to see their zeal succeed as it deserved.

The central point of admiration was the confectionery booth located in the centre of the room. It was modest in appearance, but artistically arranged. Here the sweetest tooth could be satisfied with the choicest home-made candy. Miss Jennie Quick presided and carefully looked after her many patrons in a most businesslike manner.

To the left was the lemonade booth, which had been beautified by an arrangement of flowers, with here and there a cluster of lemons suspended from the top, giving unmistakable evidence of the kind of business carried on. Miss Minnie Williams and Miss Etta Krymer were in charge, and many thirsty persons in the large audience sought this desirable recess for a glass of refreshing lemonade.

To the right was the flower booth, which gave the impression of an ideal garden spot. The furnace had been so covered with nature's fairest flowers, that it was temporarily forgotten that there was one there. With the evergreens, roses and ferns that had been skilfully arranged, it was exceedingly difficult to keep away, and then Mrs. J. Fred MacDonald, Miss Mabel Wilson, and Miss Emma Gillem, who proved themselves expert florists, made sales that were most satisfactory.

Nearby was a huge parasol suspended from the ceiling, under whose sheltering folds many were found, interesting themselves in a very handsome selection of smaller fans, which Mrs. Harry Marshall convincingly demonstrated was a necessary factor in every one's summer outfit.

At the farther end of the room was the cake table. No one was slow in appreciating this fact, and the supply did not last long. Mrs. F. E. Woodruff and Miss Elizabeth Dunn, whose opinions on cakes are not to be questioned even by the experienced culinary artists, had no trouble in rapidly turning the pastry into the currency that was sought after.

In the rear of the above table were seated P. Ludwig Conde and his symphony orchestra, and at intervals selections were rendered that were entrancing to all. It conveyed the thought of fairyland as the sweet strains came to the ear, making the whole affair ideal.

The decorations throughout were lavender and white, and the members of the King's Daughters were gowned in these colors, the symbol of the society, whose name is legion.

To Miss Mabel Woodruff, as chairman of the committee of arrangements, and Miss Lillian A. Force, as chairman of the decorating committee, assisted by other members of the circle is due the picturesque appearance and success attending the affair. They were assisted by George Gayle, treasurer of the church, who gratuitously erected the booths, the lumber being furnished by Pearson & Gayle.

Miss Virginia VanWinkle had charge of the waitresses, who were gowned in white. They were the Misses Cora Laire, Mary VanFleet, Maud VanDyke, Florence White, May Williams, Nettie Kreitling, Nellie McGinnis, Eva Lance, Josephine Fritz, Mattie Cook, Jeannette Simpson.

In the absence of Rev. Cornelius Schenck, his son, Cornelius Schenck, Jr., was present and filled his father's place at the table.

William Crawford, stationed at the door, did excellent service in receiving the tickets and money, while the check room was in charge of Miss Minnie Arnold and Miss Grace Smith, who did efficient work.

Mrs. O. M. Dunham also did much to make the festival a success by assisting the young women.

When the moon peeped through the windows in the Grace M. E. church last evening, it shone on a very pretty scene. Tasteful decorations of ferns, flowers and bunting, and the waitresses in their charming costumes brightened up the interior until it could hardly be recognized. The Ladies Aid society were holding an ice-cream and strawberry festival. The fancy table at one end was crowded with dainty articles of all kinds, while the table itself added beauty to the room by its artistic decorations. Here Mrs. Louis A. Hummer, assisted by Mrs. Ezra Loomis, Mrs. A. Lutkins, Mrs. H. K. Carroll and Mrs. A. A. Taft, sold to all who cared to buy.

The next in order came the candy table with its load of delicious homemade dainties. This charming booth was under the charge of Mrs. A. M. Most, assisted by Misses Carrie Tingley, Agnes Tingley, Grace Carroll, Alice Carroll, Della Voehl, Clara Steiner and Mrs. Winckler.

The lemonade booth, although small, continued to attract a large crowd about it who were well served by Mrs. W. H. Griffin and Miss Belle Lunger.

The flower table at the other end was a perfect bower of flowers and greens, and reflected great credit on those who arranged it. Although well stocked with flowers at the start, the supply rapidly diminished and the vases were almost entirely emptied. This booth was arranged and taken care of during the evening by Miss Margaret Schuck and Miss Alice E. Loomis.

In the church parlors little tables were placed and here ice cream and strawberries were sold. The ice cream committee consisted of Miss Vermeule, Mrs. Higgins and Mrs. Edward Sebring. The strawberries were under the charge of Mrs. Charles Hummer, Mrs. Morton and Mrs. Florence Cobb. Mrs. Lunger and Mrs. Shepherd were in charge of the cake.

The waitresses were the Misses Ella Benner, Mabel Benner, Mabel Loomis, Minnie Marsh, Anna Doeringer and Nellie Vermeule.

Owing to so many other things taking place the same night the attendance was not as large as it otherwise would have been. The festival will be continued tonight also.

FOR ST. MARY'S CHURCH.

The Children of Mary Conduct a Profitable Festival.

The strawberry and ice-cream festival arranged and given by the Children of Mary of St. Mary's church last evening in the C. Y. M. L. hall was a large success. Owing to the storm of the previous night it had been postponed, and the increased patronage accorded last night fully repaid them. Tables were placed in the various rooms, and were very prettily decorated by those in charge. In one of the main rooms a billiard table was transformed into a pleasing picture, through the arrangement of beautiful flowers, in the midst of which were scattered large handsome cakes that attracted the attention of all. The hall was thronged with people, who purchased freely the articles on sale.

Those presiding were:

Ice-cream, cake and strawberry—Miss Colbert, Miss McGrath, Miss Glennon, Miss Mercier.

Lemonade, soda water and Russian tea—Miss Margaret Fosbere, Miss Margaret Churchill.

During the evening the young people enjoyed dancing, music for which was furnished by Eugene O'Reilly. Yesterday afternoon the hall was opened and many of the school children availed themselves of the opportunity of attending. It will be continued this evening.

AT HOPE CHAPEL.

Sale of Strawberries and Ice Cream Swells the Excursion Fund.

A strawberry and ice cream festival was held in Hope chapel, last evening, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid society, for the benefit of the excursion fund. For the past few days the ladies have worked zealously together decorating the interior of the chapel, and otherwise making it pleasant and comfortable for those who would attend, but owing to many other similar amusements last evening, the attendance was not as large as expected.

The ladies who were in attendance at the several are as follows:

Ice cream booth—Mrs. Page, Mrs. Radin, and Mrs. Montgomery.

Flower booth—Mrs. Chamberlain, Mrs. Shepherd, and Mrs. Frank.

Lemonade booth—Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Sweeney.

Candy booth—Mrs. Randolph and Mrs. Gray.

Cake booth—Mrs. Bushby and Mrs. Robinson.

Strawberry booth—Mrs. Higgins and Mrs. Harrison.

Fancy booth—Mrs. Struthers and Mrs. Young.

The committee was composed of Mrs. S. R. Struthers and Mrs. McComas.

The festival will be continued this afternoon and evening.

Elizabeth claims to have gained 6,200 population during the last five years.

PRETTY CHURCH WEDDING.

The Hebert-Miller Nuptials Celebrated Last Evening.

A pretty church wedding was that in Holy Cross church last Friday at seven o'clock, when Miss Kate Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Speir Miller, of Mercer avenue, was married to Frederick Lyddon Hebert, of North Plainfield.

Around the chancel was a handsome display of the choicest flowers, in the centre of which stood several palms.

Long before the hour for the ceremony the church was filled with a large number of both Plainfield and North Plainfield relatives and friends of the contracting parties.

Previous to the appointed hour for the ceremony to be solemnized, H. S. Sammond, organist of the Park Congregational church in Brooklyn, rendered a select programme of music from well known composers. When the bridal party appeared they were preceded by the ushers, who were followed by the maids of honor, Miss May Goodwin, of New York, and Miss Jeanette Bryan, of North Plainfield, and by Miss Blanche Miller, sister of the bride, as bridesmaid. Each carried handsome bouquets of white and pink roses. The bride was accompanied by her father. She was gowned in white satin and wore a veil.

The familiar notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered in a faultless manner as they entered the church.

When the altar was reached they were met by the groom, and best man, A. W. Cummings, of Brooklyn, and Rev. T. Logan Murphy, who performed the impressive and beautiful service of the Episcopal church in joining the happy couple in the holy bonds of wedlock.

They retired from the church after the ceremony while Lohengrin's wedding march was being played.

After the wedding a reception was given at the home of the bride's parents on Mercer avenue to the relatives and a few friends.

The ushers, all from Brooklyn, were: Harvey Hebert, W. H. Hebert, brothers of the groom, Arthur Tater, Alfred Titterton.

New York Fashion Letter.

In the make up of the summer wardrobe for leaving town, the bicycle gown, or rather the bicycle outfit, is such an important factor that the choice of material and style is a serious question. Mohair or alapaca is a favorite fabric, and is equally desirable for street and traveling costume on account of its light weight. Linen, duck and holland in tailor form, with blazer or Eton jacket and dainty cotton or silk shirts are made up for mid-summer wear. For cooler days the Norfolk jacket increases in popularity. Mohair also appears in the new bathing costumes and is a serviceable fabric as it does not easily absorb water. The "Trilby" jackets, now so popular, are very pretty in mohair, lined with bright colors and trimmed with revers of velvet or silk. These jackets are made up in the same material of the skirt as well as of pique, embroidery and linen to be worn with wool skirts. Fancy waists are more abundant, more varied and more attractive than ever. The styles, fabrics and trimming with their Dresden and Watteau effects are ideal.

"La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion" cost $3.50 each for a year's subscription, or 35 cents a copy. "The French Dressmaker" is $3 per annum, or 30 cents a copy; and "La Mode" $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer don't take any substitute, but apply by mail to Messrs. A. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th street, New York city.

Medals for the High School Meet.

Four special medals will be offered at the field day of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association, which takes place Saturday afternoon. F. L. C. Martin has given a silver medal for the quarter-mile bicycle race; William H. Rogers, another for the one-mile bicycle race, and the Eldridge Bicycle Company one for the two-mile bicycle race. The Eldridge Bicycle Company has also offered a gold medal to the contestant scoring the most points. Their medals are now on exhibition in their store.

The P. H. S. A. A. will furnish the other prizes—a silver medal for first place and a bronze one for second.

Lillian Russell to Sing.

Lillian Russell's throat trouble has been removed, and after a week's absence from the cast of "The Tzigane" at Abbey's Theatre in New York, she will return tonight and sing the leading part to the close of the season, Saturday evening of next week. Clara Lane, who has been singing Miss Russell's part since last Thursday, has done remarkably good work, and is deserving of much hearty praise; but, of course, her task has been a very embarrassing one, as that of all understudies is, and she is probably the happiest artist in New York today, knowing that Miss Russell is to return.

RAPID TRANSIT.

Elizabeth People Can Ride in Trolley Cars Now.

The trolley road in Elizabeth was formally opened this morning and hereafter Elizabethans will enjoy the latest street railroad facilities.

At half-past ten o'clock four cars, loaded with specially invited guests of the company, left the Union station on Broad street and made a trip over the entire road, after which the party was conveyed to the Zouave armory, on Broad street, and entertained at dinner.

The first car for the accommodation of the traveling public left the Elizabethport station for uptown, at eleven o'clock.

The new cars will be in operation on all branches of the road in the city. For a short time the terminus of the Newark line will be on North Broad street. It will be a week or two yet before the line at the Newark end will be completed so as to permit of cars running straight through from this city.

In order to guard against accidents, the cars, in addition to being provided with fenders, will be run at a speed not exceeding eight miles an hour.

Capt. J. F. Hubbard, director of the Board of Freeholders, received and accepted an invitation to be present at the opening of the trolley railroad and is in Elizabeth today enjoying the programme as told about above.

THE BEE HIVE ANNIVERSARY.

Plaut & Co., of Newark, Have Been in Business Twenty-Five Years.

The Newark "Bee Hive", L. S. Plaut & Co.'s dry goods emporium, is this week celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of its incorporation. The business that today is one of the largest in the State began life a quarter of a century ago in one-half of a little store at 721 Broad street. The firm's trade grew with the city, outstripping scores of contemporaries, and proving that the American public appreciates business enterprise, particularly when it is modestly yet liberally advertised. The present firm comprises Louis Plaut, Moses Plaut, Oscar Michaels, and Mrs. L. S. Plaut, the widow of the founder of the business.

HAS MUSICAL TALENT.

Frank C. Doremus To Finish His Studies in Germany.

Frank C. Doremus, a grandson of Mr. Doremus, of Washington avenue, sailed today for Germany, where he goes to pursue his musical studies. Mr. Doremus was formerly a pupil in the North Plainfield public school, but deciding to make music a profession, left it to enter the Metropolitan Conservatory of Music, where he was regarded as a pupil of unusual promise. This young artist, though not having reached his majority, has been heard in select musical circles, and as a pianist plays with a finish and expression that is admirable and enjoyable, and at no distant day will undoubtedly receive the public recognition that his talents deserve. He was accompanied by Mr. Rodler and sister, of Morristown, both talented musicians.

Principal Clark Discharged.

The opposition to A. T. S. Clark, principal of the Metuchen school, culminated Tuesday night in his discharge and the election of a successor. This action was taken at a meeting of the Raritan Township School Board.

CATHOLIC YOUNG MEN.

Annual Field Day Sports to Be Held at Newark August 10th.

The Diocesan Union, of which the C. Y. M. L. of this city is a prominent member, have decided on the following events for their field day sports which will be held in Caledonian Park at Newark on August 10th:

100 yards dash, 300 yards run, 440 yards run, novice one-mile run, one-and-a-half-mile bicycle race, putting the sixteen-pound shot, and high jump.

Gold and silver medals will be given to first and second place men. A handsome banner will be given to the society scoring the most points. The points will be counted as follows: five for first, three for second, and one for third. After the athletic sports a reception will be tendered to the visiting societies, followed by a banquet.

The Union adopted a button something on the style of the National Union of Y. M. C. S.

The next meeting of the Union will be held at Orange the first Sunday in July.

That new P. R. R. depot must come, sooner or later, and though it seems to have "slipped a trolley" for a little time it will arrive one of these days.—Elizabeth Journal.

The sweet girl graduate is here, and the nation awaits, with almost breathless anxiety, her final peroration on the momentous problems of the day, before she evolves from the student to the alumni.

Governor Altgeld says that when the Illinois State Democratic convention decided for free silver they represented ninety per cent. of the party. Senator Palmer says in reference to the same matter that they only represent fifteen per cent. It looks bad for the Illinois Democrats when two such public men disagree as to where their friends are at.

The aptness of what Councilman Frost said Monday night in reference to the city endeavoring to secure only the most expert advisors in the construction of the sewer system, and thereby avoid complications, legal or otherwise, was well illustrated before the Supreme Court at Trenton, Tuesday, when the sewer contracts of Westfield, where they were not so careful, were set aside.

In Bloomfield they have hens, and wherever there are hens there are roosters. Roosters are bound to crow, because that is one of the proper functions of the barnyard king. But the roosters in Bloomfield must be troubled with insomnia, for they do a great deal of crowing in the dark hours of the night. This condition of affairs has created trouble in Bloomfield. Mrs. Geckler asserts that the cuckle doodle-do disturbs her sleep and she has therefore made complaint to the Board of Health. These officials investigated the case and found the boisterous rooster to be a member of a model hennery. Now the Board of Health is perplexed, and are awaiting a decision from counsel as to whether or not they have authority to stop the rooster from crowing. For the sake of suffering humanity in the future from such afflictions as undue rooster crowing, it is to be hoped that an affirmative decision will be rendered by the counsel, so that the world may profit from the experiments which may be invoked to stop this nuisance.

New Brunswick's Street Railway Warfare

The State Supreme Court, Tuesday, on application of Allan H. Strong, granted a writ of certiorari removing the electric railway ordinance of New Brunswick to the Supreme Court, together with all proceedings of the City Council in connection with its passage. The prosecutors of the writ are William B. and Mary Vannostwick, of George street and Throop avenue, New Brunswick, who allege that the proposed change from horses to electricity will be an injury to their property, and that the tracks of the company in turning this corner will be so close to the curb that there will not be room for a horse and wagon to pass between. It is generally understood that while the Vannostwicks appear as the ostensible prosecutors, the real opponent of the project is the Raritan River Railroad Company. The opposition of the railroad company is due to the fear that the trolley company intends to extend its lines from New Brunswick to South Amboy, thus coming in competition with the railroad company. This writ has been served on Mayor Williamson, and it will act as a stay of proceedings.

New Meat Market.

George Egel, for a number of years manager for Mrs. D. I. Smalley, has rented the store now being built by George Kirch, at the corner of Grandview avenue and Somerset street, where he will open a first-class meat market.

Mrs. Smalley has secured Charles Arnold, who for a number of years conducted the business now run by Fred Endres on Liberty street, as manager in place of Mr. Egel.

GREATEST OF GUNS.

IT WILL SINK BIG SHIPS AT TEN MILES RANGE.

Will Hurl 500 Pounds of Explosive With Deadly Accuracy. Horrible Havoc of This New Marvel of Ordinance Which Distances all Other Guns.

Maxim, the gunmaker, and Dr. Schupphaus, the gunpowder expert, have just invented a new cannon and torpedo powder which will knock all modern war vessels to pieces like eggshells. This big gun will throw a huge cannon ball full of explosives ten miles, and where it strikes it will smash into kindling wood everything within hundreds of feet.

In fact, this new terror doesn't even have to hit a ship to do this. If the shot lands in the water near by it will sink the ship and stun everybody on board from the force of the explosion.

The discovery is called "the Maxim-Schupphaus system of throwing aerial torpedoes from guns by means of a special powder which starts the projectile with a low pressure and increases its velocity by keeping the pressure well up throughout the whole length of the gun." Patents on the system have been taken out in the United States and European countries.

The special powder employed is almost gun cotton, compounded with such a small per cent. of nitro-glycerine as to possess none of the disadvantages of nitro-glycerine powders, and preserved from decomposition through a slight admixture of urea. It is perfectly safe to handle and can be beaten with a heavy hammer on an anvil without exploding.

The secret of its remarkable power lies in a simple mathematical truth which no one had previously thought of. High explosive powder is now loaded into cannon in the form of strips, small cubes or solid cylindrical rods from one-half to three-fourths of an inch in diameter, several feet in length and looking like a bundle of sticks of dark beeswax. When the powder is touched off the ends and circumference of each rod of powder ignites instantaneously and burns toward the center.

The volume of gases generated by combustion grows constantly less, because the burning surface is less, and as it is the volume of gas which gives velocity to the projectile shot from the gun, a loss of velocity is the inevitable result. The projectile does not go so far as it would if the pressure of the gases had increased, or had at least been increased.

In each piece of the Maxim-Schupphaus powder is a lot of small holes running through the entire length of the rod. When the powder is ignited the flame spreads instantaneously not only over the circumference of each rod but throughout the perforations as well. These little holes are burnt out with such rapidity that the difference in the volume of explosive gases generated at the beginning and at the end of the bore of the gun is about in the ratio of sixteen to one.

The projectile therefore leaves the gun with terrific velocity, and each little hole in the rods of the powder does its share toward hurrying it on its mission of destruction miles away from the scene. With a big gun the havoc wrought by this new wonder of modern ordnance would be incalculable.

This new death dealing powder has been fired in field guns and in the heavy coast defense rifles at Sandy Hook with surprising results. From a ten inch gun, loaded with 128 pounds of this powder, a projectile weighing 571 pounds was thrown eight miles out to sea. The pressures on the rods of powder were more uniform than any yet recorded, which is a most important point in deciding the value of a high explosive powder. Without uniform pressures accuracy of aim is impossible.

SLAVE OF AN OUTLAW BAND.

A Strange Story of Crime Told by a Negro Branded by an Outlaw.

By a stroke of good luck George McGowan, a negro about 20 years old, has fallen into the hands of Chief of Police Massey at Wichita, Kan. This youth claims to have been a slave to the allied band of outlaws for ten years. A white ring about his neck shows where he was lassoed from a pony while trying to escape. He is branded "LLL" on his right leg. His initials are cut into his left arm, the work being done, he says, by John Long and Bill Dalton. On his back deep in the flesh is the mark of the obliterating iron used to deface range brands, and over this is another brand, the "half-hitch."

Federal and State officers have been questioning him all day, and he has told them that cattle are stolen on the ranges and shipped by carload lots to Eastern markets. The secret hiding places of the band in New Mexico, Colorado, Kansas and Indian Territory are now known, as are also their signs, grips and passwords.

Chet Long, one of the band, is in jail here, and Handsome Charles Parker, who stole, shipped to Kansas and sold six carloads of cattle, is under heavy guard at the City Hospital. He was desperately wounded in a fight at Ashland, Kan., when his arrest was attempted.

The outlaw's slave is being closely guarded, as threats have been made upon his life. He declares that the train, bank and cattle rustlers are all banded together, and he has given a long list of names to the officers.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Northwestern Americans, who are enormously proud of their mild climate, take pleasure in calling attention to the fact that their towns are on the same parallel of latitude with several Mediterranean cities famous for their delightful climate, and pleasant cities of France. Portland, Or., for example, is in the same latitude as Venice, and San Francisco as Athens. Tacoma is not far north of Geneva. Port Townsend considerably south of Paris, and Seattle about the same latitude as Nantes.

There is something radically wrong with Uncle Sam when its takes two nights and one day for New Brunswick papers to reach The Press office.

The present trolley road system in Plainfield is of no earthly benefit to the city or to the stockholders. Benefit both by making the proposed extension.

The socalled better element of every party seems to be that portion who are, figuratively speaking, the underdogs in the control of party organization.

No better evidence of the culture of Plainfield is needed than the graduating exercises which are now being carried on in the admirable private and public schools of the city.

Senator Daly, the Democratic member of the investigating committee, has presented a minority report of the work of the committee to the body of which he is a member. While, of course, the presentation of this minority report is merely perfunctory in so far as concerns the suggestions he offers having any effect on the action of the Legislature, yet many of the conclusions which he has formed from intimate asssociation with the work of the investigation are worthy of serious consideration by his fellow Legislators. Senator Daly says in his report that he agrees with the majority of the committee in the charge that unwarranted extravagance has existed in the purchase of supplies for certain branches of the State government, but adds that it "has not resulted from a criminal intent to defraud, but rather from a negligent performance of duty and a lack of scrutiny and care in the exercise of office." Continuing he says:

> I am forcibly impressed with this one-sided investigation. I look upon it with fear and dread, for I am led to believe that many have been smirched by the mere suggestion of their names in connection therewith, but who, if afforded an opportunity to be fully heard, might easily prove their innocence. In these times of excitement let us be fair and just, and give vent to no utterances merely to create false public sentiment, or to advance personal and individual ambitions. When the injury is done we cannot recall it, and in our calm and cool moments many pangs of conscience will ensue, but no way is left for making reparation to the injured.

These are words of advice that should be calmly and fairly considered by Legislators.

Neglected colds in the head almost invariably precede catarrh, causing an excessive flow of mucous, and if the mucous discharge becomes interrupted the disagreeable results of catarra will follow, such as bad breath, severe pain across forehead and about the eyes, a roaring and buzzing sound in the ears and oftentimes a very offensive discharge. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure for these troubles.

HIGH SCHOOL GAMES.

Good Sport at the Crescent Oval on Saturday.

TRACK WAS IN FINE CONDITION.

The New Track, However, Was a Little Rough and Soft, Thus Accounting for Slow Time—A Stevens' School Man Captures the Most Points—An Exhibition Mile Ridden By S. C. Crane.

Nature did all she could to give the Plainfield High School Athletic Association a successful field day, Saturday afternoon, and so it was from an athletic point of view, although the attendance was not as large as was anticipated. The day was a perfect one and the bicycle track was in a fine condition, but the new running track was rough and rather soft, thus accounting for the slow time made in the 100 yards dash.

A portion of the stand was decorated in blue and white for the Stevens School contingent, while dark blue and red, the High School colors, appeared at every point. The other schools were not represented by the colors.

In the first event, the 100 yards dash, there were six starters: L. F. Alfaro, Stevens, Hoboken; George F. Rose, Leals, Plainfield; E. I. Serrell, P.H.S., Plainfield; Howard Sharkey, Stevens, Hoboken; George Hercot, Stevens, Hoboken, and George Dupee, J. S., North Plainfield.

At the pistol shot, Hercot led out with Dupee close behind, and in that order they reached the finish, Dupee gaining slightly. Alfaro succeeded in getting third place. Serrell, who was fourth, was greatly handicapped by running in a street rut. The time was 11 seconds.

The contestants in the next event, putting the shot, were: George P. Smith, P. H. S., Plainfield; Volney F. Green, P. H. S., Plainfield; L. F. Alfaro, Stevens, Hoboken; A. F. Real, Stevens, Hoboken; Lambert Fish, P. H. S., Plainfield, and E. I. Serrell, P. H. S., Plainfield.

Smith out put his competitors at the start and had no trouble winning. His put was 34 feet, 8 inches, breaking the High School record of 32 feet, 1 1-2 inches made by himself last year. Read was second with 33 feet, 6 inches and Fish third with 28 feet.

The one-mile bicycle was run in one heat. The contestants were: V. F. Green, P. H. S., Plainfield; F. Everett, Stevens, Hoboken; W. M. McCutchen, Leals, Plainfield; Mr. Harrington, Stevens, Hoboken, and George Coard, P. H. S., Plainfield.

Everett paced all the way, with Harrington close behind, and the Plainfield boys in the rear. A good steady pace brought the men around in quick time, but at the finish Everett spurted out and crossed the tape a winner. McCutchen and Green followed but could not catch him and finished second and third, respectively. Coard took fourth from the other Stevens man. The time was 2.53 2-5.

In the 440-yard run there were four starters, all Stevens men, J. W. Beveridge, J. F. Alfaro, H. R. Sharkey and G. Hereot. Hereot won in a close finish, with sharkey at his heels. Alfaro secured third. The time was one minute, two seconds.

The high jump brought out four men, Geo. P. Smith, P. H. S., Plainfield; V. F. Green, P. H. S., Plainfield; Lambert H. Fish, P. H. S., Plainfield; Ralph Campbell, N. Y. U., Plainfield. Campbell, holder of the High School record of 5 feet 9 inches, jumped merely as pacemaker for the rest, being ineligible to win a prize as he is a college boy. Green won by clearing 4 feet 10 inches, which Fish was unable to do, thus giving Fish second. Smith took third with 4 feet 6 inches.

The starters in the quarter-mile bicycle race were V. F. Green, P. H. S., Plainfield; Geo. Coard, P. H. S., Plainfield; Mr. Harrington, Stevens, Hoboken; F. Everett, Stevens, Hoboken. Green and Everett fought it out for first place, but a strain received in jumping hampered Green, and Everett won by a length, with Green second. Coard showed up well at the last, leaving the other Stevens man far in the rear and almost catching the leaders, finished third. The time was 35 1-5 seconds.

The pole vault was contested by F. W. Cornwell, P. H. S.; Geo. P. Smith, P. H. S.; E. I. Serrell, P. H. S.; Geo. Hereot, Stevens, Hoboken; F. H. Fish, Jr., P. H. S. A. A. As Fish is not a member of the school, but only the association, he merely contested as pacemaker. Hereot could not jump the first length of 6 feet, and so fell out. Cornwell won by clearing 8 feet with a very pretty exhibition of vaulting. Serrell, after several ludicrous attempts, got the trick of vaulting, and tied Smith for second place at 7 feet 6 inches. Smith won on the jump off.

The last event was the two-mile bicycle race. The starters were: V. F. Green, P. H. S.; R. L. Douglass, P. H. S.; F. Everett, Stevens, Hoboken; and W. M. McCutchen, Leals. Everett set a hot pace with McCutchen, Green and Douglass following in the order named. The first mile was ridden in 2:54, with Everett pacing all the way. The same order was kept until on the long turn of the last lap when McCutchen started out with a spurt for which he is noted. It was too much for Everett, who had to ride his best to keep Green half a length behind. McCutchen won in 2:41, with Everett second, and Green third. Douglass finished two lengths behind Green.

The medals were then presented by Referee Taggart. The Rogers medal for the one-mile bicycle race, the search-light lantern donated by Martin for the one-fourth bicycle race, and the gold medal for the most points given by the Eldridge Bicycle Company, were awarded to the plucky rider from Stevens, F. Everett. McCutchen was given the silver and gold medal for the two-mile bicycle race, presented by the Eldridge Bicycle Company. The other medals were given by the P. H. S. A. A., and were made of silver for first prize, and bronze for second, a very pretty design with the emblem of the association upon it.

S. C. Crane, Columbia, ex-P. H. S. A. A., rode a mile exhibition in 2:28. He was paced by Darling, Havens, and Cuming.

DEATH OF HORACE KIMBALL IN HIS NINETY-SECOND YEAR.

A Respected and Substantial Citizen—First Dentist to Recognize the Value of Sulphuric Ether As an Anesthetic.

By the death of Horace Kimball, which occurred last Tuesday at his home on East Fifth street, this city loses one of its oldest, most respected and substantial citizens. Mr. Kimball was in his ninety-second year and had resided in Plainfield since 1871. Mr. Kimball was the son of James and Mary Esterbrook Kimball and was born in Newburyport, Mass., in 1804. He received his early education in that place, and afterwards entered Philips Academy at Andover, Mass., where he graduated in 1818. From that time up to 1830 he was engaged in business in Boston and New York, where he was successful. However, he had a natural inclination towards medicine, and in 1831 he left business to enter the Harvard Medical school, from which he graduated three years later. After leaving this school he studied dentistry with Dr. Flagg in Boston, and in 1836 he opened an office in Park place, New York. Eight years after he removed to Orange where he established a reputation that brought to him a large and lucrative practice.

He was the first dentist to recognize the value of sulphuric ether as an anesthetic, and administered it with much success for the elder Dr. Valentine Mott in a number of early operations.

Mr. Kimball leaves a wife, six sons and two daughters. The funeral will take place from his late residence on Thursday afternoon at half-past two o'clock.

OLD LAND MARK GONE.

A House Burned That Antedates the Declaration of Independence.

The house owned and resided in by John Miller and sister at Round Top, five miles from this city, was burned to the ground Sunday morning, and New Jersey thereby loses a land mark that antedates the declaration of independence.

Both Mr. Miller and sister were in attendance at church in Mt. Bethel when the fire broke out, which is supposed to have become ignited from a defective chimney, and by the time they arrived at the scene of the conflagration the structure was almost destroyed. A few of the household goods were saved from the building by nearby neighbors. The house and contents were but slightly insured. John Cooper, who discovered the fire, jumped on a horse and after notifying a few near at hand, started at a fast gait for the church to inform Mr. Miller. He had proceeded but a short distance, when the horse he was riding, stumbled and fell. The riders was thrown to the ground and sustained a fracture of the hip.

The house was erected over a century ago, and was of the colonial kind. During the war of the rebellion, when Gen. Washington's troops were camped for the winter near what is now called Washington Rock, this house was frequently used by the General as a stoping place during his reconnoitre expeditions.

Ordained to the Priesthood.

Roger Aloysius McGinley, who is well known in this city, was ordained to the priesthood in St. Patrick's cathedral at Newark on Saturday, and said his first mass in the Church of Holy Cross in New York yesterday. He was born in New York city in 1870, and began his early studies under the direction of the Sisters of Charity. Later he entered St. Laurent college, Canada. He was graduated from Seton Hall college in 1891, and began his theological studies the following year.

GETTING DOWN TO WORK.

FOURTH OF JULY COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

Vincent W. Nash Will Be the Permanent Chairman—Eighteen Organizations Make Favorable Reports.

There was a large attendance of the members of the Fourth of July committees at the meeting in Red Men's hall last Monday. Chairman V. W. Nash presided and called for the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, which were approved.

T. J. Carey reported that he had seen J. W. Murray and that he had declined the position of chairman of the committee. William Newcorn stated that the position had been filled by appointing V. W. Nash, and Wm. Kirk had been appointed to the latter's place as first vice-president.

Communications were received from Warren Engine Company No. 1, and the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein society, signifying a desire to participate in the celebration.

A communication was received from S. H. DeHart in regard to the purchase of fireworks, which was received and filed.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians reported the following committee: E. Birmingham, M. Nugent, and J. F. O'Haran. The Catholic Benevolent Legion: T. A. McCarthy, Thomas Matthews, and Patrick Divver. The T. A. B: P. J. Reville, John Hickey, and John Carney.

Alert Hose Company responded with the following committee: William Kirk, S. H. Whitney, and Louis Timpson. The City Council: W. A. Westphal, V. L. Frazee, and S. A. Ginna.

Motions were made that executive, finance, subscription, parade and printing committees be appointed, and that all be under the direction of the executive committee. It was so ordered.

The subject of when the parade should take place was discussed considerably, and it was finally decided to have it at 9:30 in the morning.

Out of a list of thirty-three societies called, fifteen either reported no action taken or had no report to make, leaving eighteen who were enthusiastic over the celebration, some stating that music had been secured.

A motion was made and carried that Alert Hose Company be asked to loan their silver hose wagon and also that the old hand engine from Scotch Plains be secured.

The following committees were then appointed by the chairman:

Executive Committee—Councilmen V. L. Frazee and S. A. Ginna; John Valiant, M. J. Cashin, A. E. Kenney, L. G. Timpson, F. A. Long, William Douglass, J. E. Flannery, Charles M. Ulrich.

Finance Committee—T. J. Carey, G. Q. Packer, Eugene Laing, James Buckle, Elston French.

Parade Committee—E. C. Morse, Amos Andrews, Joseph Blimm, C. F. Stephens, G. F. Edwards and Henry Haurand.

Committee on Collections—Mayor Alexander Gilbert, Borough Mayor B. A. Hegeman, Jr., Councilman C. J. Fisk, S. P. T. Wilbur, J. J. Kenney, William Kirk, Charles Lyman, Roger Murray, J. C. Peck and William Newcorn.

Committee on Printing—Councilman William Westphal, J. P. Allis, W. A. Woodruff, P. A. VanFleet, and Joseph T. Dunham.

Mr. Newcorn made a motion, which was carried, that the Executive Committee be empowered to create any sub-committees they saw fit.

The meeting then adjourned and the various committees met to organize and get down to business.

Death of A. P. M. Roome.

Mrs. B. A. Hegeman, Sr., of Sycamore avenue, North Plainfield, received the sad news on Saturday of the death of her brother, A. P. M. Roome, at his residence, 225 Central Park West, New York city, which occurred that morning. Several years ago Mr. Roome lived in his mother's house on Washington avenue in this city, and was so unfortunate as to lose two children by death while residing there. Miss Eleanor Roome, his sister, also of Sycamore avenue, has been at his bedside for several days, and was present at the time of his death. He leaves a wife, besides the two sisters mentioned, to mourn the loss of a good and kind husband. His remains will be interred in Greenwood cemetery this afternoon.

New Residence for Washington Park.

Geo. T. Rogers has purchased a building lot on Myrtle avenue, adjoining Councilman Peck's residence, and yesterday ground was broken for the erection of a dwelling which he will occupy. Seaman Williams has the contract for the masonry work. Charles H. Smith is the architect.

At Hymen's Altar.

Cards of invitation have been issued by Mr. and Mrs. Elias T. Day for the marriage of their daughter, Katharine Green, to William Hinckley Mitchell, on Monday evening, June 24th, at Calvary church, East Orange. Miss Day has many friends in Plainfield.

BAD MEN ACROSS THE WAY.

BOROUGH MARSHALS KEPT ON THE MOVE ON SUNDAY.

Young Men Who Enjoyed a Beer Party, a Poker Party and a Swimming Party Take Refuge on This Side.

There was plenty of business in the borough on Sunday and the marshals were kept on the hustle all day. In the morning Marshal J. Goodwin found several young men on Charles Hyde's property on Beekman street enjoying a box of beer and having a good time in general. Before he could reach them they crossed the brook and were just as well off as if they had been in Canada, so far as the powers of the marshal extended to arrest them.

In the afternoon Chief Marshal VanHorn started a tramp, who was loafing about Giraud and Myrtle avenues, on the road and he left town.

From there he walked along Green brook and found several boys swimming without tights. Their clothes were on the Plainfield side of the brook and the chief was not able to catch them. However, his presence was sufficient to drive them from the water.

Further down stream near Grant avenue the chief discovered about twenty-five young men in a lot playing poker, evidently for money. They received warning enough to admit of their escape and none were caught. One of them is a well-known young man in the borough whose detection in a like manner on former occasions does not seem to have the desired effect of making him desist from his discreditable practices.

A WOMAN OF INFLUENCE.

Short Sketch of Mrs. Krom, as a Woman's Suffrage Advocate.

The Newark Daily Advertiser is daily publishing sketches of New Jersey women who are prominent in the movement for woman's school suffrage. The following about Mrs. S. R. Krom of this city was published on Saturday:

Mrs. Krom, though of Southern birth, has long resided in Plainfield. She is a white ribboner, and is superintendent of the department of "Tobacco and Narcotics" for the State W. C. T. U. She rendered a valuable service to the association last year by compiling careful statistics of the number of women voting at school elections, and serving on school boards in each county of New Jersey. She thinks the ballot in woman's hand would "raise the moral tone of the whole country, especially as regards the liquor traffic and the prevention of the regulation of vice."

She also points to the trouble women have in getting the age of consent laws raised in different States, while in Colorado, where women composed part of the last Legislature, the age of protection was raised to 18 years. It will be recalled that it was owing entirely to the untiring efforts of the women of this State that the age at which a girl can legally consent to her own ruin was changed in 1885 from 10 to 15 years.

Industry in Westfield.

The Cooper Lamp Company Saturday morning filed articles of incorporation with the Clerk of Union county. The plant is to be located at Westfield and the company's capital is $75,000. The incorporators are Sherman Cooper and Enoch Richardson, of Westfield; Philip and Chas. E. Hathaway, of Bergen Point. The company will engage in the manufacture and sale of a lamp patented by Mr. Cooper, and will have a branch office in New York city.

Long Been Needed.

A new clock dial has been purchased and is expected daily to arrive for attachment to the borough fire gong. When placed in position it will blow the gong twice instead of three times on the test blows, and at seven o'clock in the morning, instead of eight as now, and at six o'clock at night.

Nearly Drove Mrs. Martin Hale Wild. How She Obtained Relief.

[SPECIAL TO OUR LADY READERS.]

"Nearly all last winter I was sick in bed, and was attended by different physicians; none cured me, none helped me very much. When I attempted to get up, it was always the same story: my back would ache, I was dizzy and faint, the bearing-down pains were terrible. I also had kidney trouble badly.

"I knew I must have help right away. I resolved to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The results were marvellous. I have gained in every way, and am entirely cured." — MRS. MARTIN HALE, Oakdale, Mass. Every druggist has it.

Children's Day Observed in the Churches.

SWEET MUSIC AND PRETTY FLOWERS

Appropriate Programmes Rendered In All the Churches Yesterday, in Which the Children Take Prominent Parts—The Floral Decorations Artistically Arranged—A Joyous Occasion in Every Particular.

From The Press of June 12.

The admirable idea of devoting one Sunday in each year to a service for the young religious workers was generally observed in this city yesterday. The exercises in the various churches were as follows:

GRACE M. E. CHURCH.

There was a large attendance at the Grace M. E. church, last evening, when the Children's Day exercises were held. A pleasing service entitled "Beyond the Skies," was carried out under the direction of John Valiant. Mrs. Powell was the organist and Miss Alice Carroll the pianist. The following was the programme: Organ voluntary; singing by school, Sing Praises; invocation, Rev. Herbert F. Randolph; Scripture reading, John Valiant, with musical responses by school; recitation, The First Children's Day, Mabel Loomis; singing by school, The Conquering Host; baptism of infants; Scripture reading, John Valiant; recitation, Summer is Here, Tina Voehl; singing by school, What Says the Sunbeams?; recitation, The Boy that Laughs, Charles Powell; scripture reading, John Valiant; singing by primary department, Little Climbers. At this time a special exercise that was very pretty and attractive was given. A stand with four steps was placed on the platform, on top of which was a cross. The steps represented Jesus Christ, Obedience, Peace and Love. On each side were places for six banners, which read "Living for Christ Day by Day." The exercises were carried out with recitations and singing by the following scholars, who came in bearing the mottoes and banners: Minnie Marsh, Carrie Pangborn, Mary Hoagland, Charles Powell, David Fairchild, Addie Carney, Sadie Winckler, Flossy Conroy, Grace Powell, Winnie Carroll, Belle DeMott, Nellie Valiant, Agnes Morse, Ada VanHorn, Mabel Gerry, Mary Wilson, Edith Taft Alice DeMott, Anna Bach, Stella Vermeule, Lottie Benner and Tina Voehl. The latter at the close placed a crown over the cross, and all joined in singing "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name." A short address on "The New Youth" by the pastor, Rev. Herbert Randolph, was to the point and helpful. The programme concluded with the collection, singing of "At the Cross" and the benediction. The floral display consisted of palms and cut flowers.

PARK AVENUE BAPTIST.

A very pretty service was held in the Park Avenue Baptist church yesterday morning. The programme was almost entirely in the hands of the Sunday-school department. A hymn and prayer was followed by a "Song of Welcome" by the school. A recitation, "The First Children's Day", by Bessie Giles, was followed by another song by the school. Recitations entitled "A Song of Summer," by Harry Smalley, and "A Deed and a Word," by Willie Nash, were given. The school sang a selection, entitled "The Flowers of June." "All the Good We Can Do" was recited by Lillian Richardson. The primary department exercises were opened, with a song by the class, followed by a recitation by Lillian Odam and a song by six little girls and boys. The "Children's Day Greeting" was sung by twelve girls and Harold Skadden gave a recitation.

A Weary Pilgrim, represented by Miss May Thompson, came on the platform lamenting her weary way. Miss Mary Giles, representing Learning, tried to cheer her up with books, while Ambition, represented by Miss H. Cuming, and Mercy, by Miss Grace Remsen, each in turn endeavored to change the weary traveler's way, and Mercy finally succeeded in awaking her from despondency. The Weary Pilgrim was then led to the "Fountain of Life" at the other end of the platform where a hymn was sung to her. After a short address by the pastor, the exercises were closed with a hymn and the benediction.

The floral decorations were beautiful. Flowers were massed along the edge of the pulpit and choir loft, and in one corner of the stage a bower was made of evergreens, in the midst of which a small fountain of real water played. In the rear of the platform potted plants and cut flowers were placed. The offering was for the benefit of the American Baptist Publication Society.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The First Presbyterian church was filled yesterday morning with those anxious to hear the rendition of the following Children's Day programme: Song, The King of Glory; invocation; Song, Oh, Come and Sing; Responsive scripture reading, "The Cross; Song, Hosanna, we Sing; The Flag, "Saving Our Country by Saving the Children; Song, Our Country's Voice; Primary exercises, participated in by the following: Lulu Kline, Minnie Line, Bertha Hull, May Pruden, Jennie Hammeal, Edna Martin, Wilhelm Kline, Edmund Templin, Nettie Cain, Willie Gaston, Arthur Templin; Dr. Worden's greeting, read by Miss Grace Overton; Address by Rev. C.E. Herring; Presentation of offerings; Presentation of prizes; Song, March on, O Banner of Jesus; Benediction. The floral decorations were principally daisies, which were arranged in an artistic manner in a large bank at the centre of the pulpit.

MT. OLIVE BAPTIST CHURCH.

The following programme under the direction of Superintendent M. C. Dobbins, was rendered by the Mt. Olive Baptist Sunday-school, yesterday afternoon: Singing by school choir; dialogue, The Glory of Heaven, Mrs. Morris and Miss Doyle; singing by scholars, I Am So Glad; essay, Flowers, Marion Alice Maynard; declamation, Beautiful World, Miss Helen Potts; singing by school; recitation, Miss Anna Connett; singing by choir; address by Superintendent R. Vanderbeek the precentor. There was a profusion of flowers used in decoration.

CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises, held in the Crescent Avenue church yesterday morning, were the same as were published in Saturday's Daily Press. The floral decorations were very pretty. On the communion table a mass of daisies and ferns were placed while large bunches of roses stood on either side. The font was also filled with daisies. Charles Davis and Gilbert Lovell assisted in the music with their violins.

Hymn, When His Salvation Bringing responsive reading; Hymn, Holy, Holy, Holy; chant, choir; Solo, Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me, Miss Banta; reading of Psalms; Hymn, For Jesus Sake; Prayer; Hymn, Jesus, Lover of My Soul; Sermon, Rev. Wm. R. Richards; Prayer; Hymn, Hear the Call; offering for Sabbath-school missionary work; Hymn, Onward Christian Soldiers.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Summer is here at last, and in its train comes the day of rejoicing in the churches—Children's Day. In the Congregational church, yesterday morning, it was celebrated with appropriate exercises. The church was artistically decorated with flowers, daisies being dominant, while large bunch of roses and syringa added to the effect. The special music was furnished by Mrs. B. T. Barnes, organist, Mrs. M. E. Dwight, pianist, and P. Ludwig Conde, violinist, and was rendered in a delightful manner. The programme was as follows:

Voluntary, Rosamande, Schubert; prayer by pastor, Rev. C. L. Goodrich; hymn; responsive reading; Gloria; Scripture reading; offertory, Serenade, Gounod; recitation, Miss Marion Dwight; song, Buttercups, Ethel Van Zandt, Margeurite Van-Zandt, Edna Conde, Ethel Lorton, and Laura Baker; singing by congregation; recitation, Arthur Robinson; song, violets, Agnes La Boyteaux, Hattie Messersmith, Caroline Fuller, Marion Dwight, and Ethel Weseman; address by Rev. C. L. Goodrich on Ants.; singing by congregation; benediction.

FIRST M. E. CHURCH.

At the First M. E. church a large audience enjoyed the children's services last evening. The church was prettily decorated with choice flowers, well arranged about the platform. The following choir assisted in rendering a service entitled "Merry Sunshine," prepared by W. L. Mason: Sopranos—Mrs. L. S. Bond, Miss Florence Barnes, Miss Edna Harris, Miss Nellie Martin, Miss Maude French, Miss Alice Jenkins, Miss Lizzie Stafford; altos—Miss Cora Sheppard, Miss Etta Raybert, Miss Eva Jenkins; tenors—L. S. Bond, Robert Davis; bassos—Arthur Crone, George Rose. They were assisted by Clarence Mills, W. MacKillop, violinists, and Raymond McGee, cornetist. The following was the programme: Organ voluntary; anthem by school, O Be Joyful; prayer, by Dr. C. R. Barnes; Bible recitation; singing by school, Happy Summer Time; recitation, Songs of Children's Day; singing by school, Come Let Us Sing; exercise, Words of Jesus; recitation, Wayside Flowers; recitation, The Birdie's Song; singing by school, Merry Sunshine; singing by primary department, Here We Come; exercise by primary department, What the Insects Said; Scripture selection; singing by school, Consider the Lilies; recitation, A True Story; recitation, Happy Childhood; singing by school, Marching to Zion; recitation, If I Was a Man; recitation, Over and Over Again; Scripture selection; singing by school, The Path of the Just; benediction.

The exercises were in charge of J. W. Jackson, superintendent of school.

Among those taking part were:

Miss Mildren Terrill, Miss Retta Pound, Alfred Coddington, Roland Horn, Mabel Jenkins and the following classes: Mrs. French, Mrs. Hull, Miss Horn.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

The Children's Day exercises at the First Baptist church were held in the Sunday-school room in the morning at 9:30. The front part of the room around the platform was beautified with a profusion of daisies, palms and smilax, presenting a pleasing picture. The exercises were participated in by the children of the primary department, under the direction of the superintendent, Mrs. Powelson. The programme included singing and recitations by the following: May Batchelor, Jeremiah Manning, 2d., Wallace Pierce, Margaret Serrll, Maude Emmons, Bertha Manning, Ethel Ga Nun, and Ernest Powelson. A pleasing feature was a vocal solo, "Come Unto Me," by Miss Bessie Blair. Howard Case was the pianist, and Lindley Hillman, violinist. There was also singing by the main school. A large number of parents and friends of the school were present, and enjoyed the exercises. The novel idea that every scholar should wear a bouquet was carried out, and as they marched to the church proper and took their seats in the gallery the sight was a most gratifying one. The decorations in the church were beautiful, and consisted of very choice cut flowers. The choir, under the direction of E. J. Fitzhugh, organist, rendered several pretty selections. The pastor, Rev. D. J. Yerkes, preached a very interesting sermon to the children.

Those in the choir were: Sopranos—Miss F. May Grant, Miss Swain, Mrs. Harold Serrell, Miss Bessie Blair, Miss Speer; altos—Misses Gussie Runyon, Nancy Randolph, Florence Kline, Bertha Needham, Grace Bonny; tenors—C. W. McCutchen, Edward B. Ryder, Mr. Smith; bassos—B. T. Barnes, William Holmes, Stacy Raynolds, George Snediker.

TRINITY REFORMED.

At the Trinity Reformed church yesterday Children's Day was observed in the morning at 10:30. The pulpit and platform were made beautiful with flowers and ferns, the arrangement of which reflected credit on those having them in charge. The Sunday-school occupied the front seats and the congregation and friends of the school filled the remainder of the church. Supt. E. E. Anthony had charge of the exercises, which were very interesting, the singing of the choir and school being especially fine. Mrs. J. M. Tier, superintendent of the primary department, is to be congratulated for the proficiency of the little ones in carrying out the following programme:

Singing—The Children's Day	School
Recitation—Children's Day Greeting,	Albert Yaeger
Scripture Reading	School
Singing—Jesus, Saviour, Dear to Me	School
Scripture Reading	School
Recitation—My Three Little Texts,	Bessie Ryndall
Scripture Reading	School
Recitation	Clara and Hazel Martin
Singing—Hear My Song	Bessie Martin
Recitation—Violets	Ruth Berg
Singing—Only a Parting Word	School

Following this interesting little programme of the primary department, two little babes were baptized and dedicated to God by Rev. J. Preston Searles, D. D., after which he made a most excellent address to the little ones. "The Relation of the Most Wonderful Book in the World, and its Author, to You" was the foundation or text he held up to his hearers. Dr. Searles has the happy faculty of being able to interest the little ones in his address, and at the same time to instruct his older hearers; and all who listened to his plain, practical address yesterday morning were well pleased with his efforts, and at the close of the service he received many congratulations. At the evening service he again gave evidence of his talents by delivering a powerful sermon from the 110th Psalm, 7th verse.

MR. HAND'S LIBERAL OFFER.

The Use of the Crescent Building Offered for the Fourth.

If Plainfield had a few more people like Charles Hand there would be no question as to the success of the proposed Fourth of July celebration. Mr. Hand told a Press representative this morning that he had decided to throw open the Crescent riding academy for the use of the general committee to entertain the visiting organizations or for any other purpose they may desire to use it for. The only expense attached to the acceptance of the offer will be to pay for the cleaning, and lighting, which will be comparatively small. The building can be used to great advantage in serving dinner to the visitors, for fully 2,000 persons can be accommodated in the structure and attended to with ease. The offer of Mr. Hand is a very liberal one.

Attention, Mr. Postmaster.

A few months ago The Press called attention to the fact that although the post boxes in town were provided with receptacles for lists of times at which collections were made from individual boxes these lists had never been posted, and that anyone who consigned his letter to a box did so in great uncertainty as to how long it would stay there before being taken to the postoffice. Since that time these lists have been provided for every post box in town and some of them have been placed in position, but the boxes on the outskirts of the town where the lists are of far greater use than in the closely settled districts, have, with one or two exceptions, been left exactly as they were before. The Press is very glad to see them even on the main streets where they are very little needed, but when they are all ready for the other boxes why not have them up?

From Pa and Ma to the Baby.

The following is a cast of the characters that will take part in the entertainment to be given by the famous Smith Family in the First Presbyterian church Friday night:

Pa Smith	Harry Williams
Ma Smith	Bessie Blair
Uncle John	George O. Stevens
Aunt Jemima	Kate Overton
Sissy Smith	Edith Lane
Sonny Smith	John Petrie

THE CAMPAIGN OF AUSTERLITZ.

Utter Rout of Austrians and Russians on His Coronation Anniversary—Crowned King of Italy—Death of Pitt—Personal Appearance at Thirty-five.

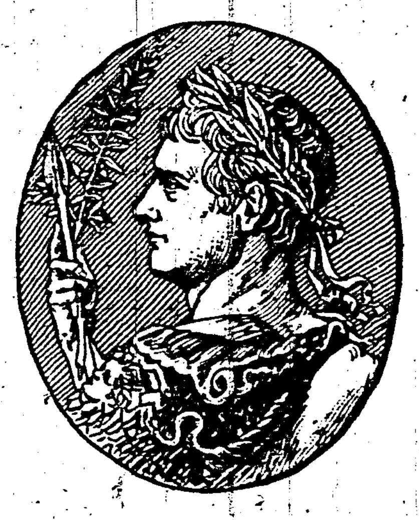
[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XVI.—FROM NOTRE DAME TO AUSTERLITZ.

To the New French Empire the Consular Republic contributed one fact of transcendent importance. That was the Code Napoleon—a work which the Emperor regarded to the end of his days as his greatest gift to posterity. Before the Revolution, France had had as many laws as provinces. The cynical Voltaire declared that in his country the traveler must change his code as often as he changed horses.

The question of unifying and nationalizing the statutes of France had been before the States-General at Versailles. By that body the measure was remanded to the National and Constituent Assemblies; by these, to the Convention; by that, to the Directory; and by that, to the Consulate. Here, then, had arisen a power at last that was able to revise and reform. A commission was appointed by the First Consul, headed by the great lawyer Tronchet, to reconstruct the jurisprudence of France.

In four months this commission made its report to the Council of State. Napoleon personally presided. The project of the commission was read, discussed, and passed on, clause by clause. On the 5th of March, 1803, the Code Civile des Francais was completed and published. It consisted of twenty-two hundred and eighty-one articles. These were arranged under three heads: The Rights of Persons; the Laws of Property; and the Methods of acquiring Property. In the code the elements of Roman Law and the law-customs of the French people were blended with singular skill. Though in the political vicissitudes of France many modifications and not a little patch-work were added thereto, the code itself gained in the estimation of mankind. It was disseminated by the Imperial conquests into the greater part of Europe, and was adopted by one people after another. The Code Napoleon became the basis of jurisprudence, not only in France, but in Sicily, Holland, Belgium, the Rhine provinces, Switzerland, Poland, and in all the countries dominated by the Latin races in Europe and America.



NAPOLEON, 1805, BY BOUILLON.

At the date of his coronation, Napoleon was thirty-five years, three months and seventeen days of age. He was in his very prime. Physically, he had triumphed over that attenuation and utter swarthiness which had marked his younger years. On his first issuance to public notice, and down to the time of the Consulate, he had worn a haggard look which, added to his thinness and his low stature, made him almost a specter. In the year of his marriage, he was described by an observant lady—as reported in Stendhal—as "the thinnest and queerest being I ever met." In another place the same authority says of him: "He was so scrawny that he inspired pity." But with the gratification of his ambitions and desires, he became plump and beautiful. He had at last recovered from the cutaneous disease which he had contracted from handling an infected rammer fallen from the hands of a gunner at the batteries before Toulon. It had required the long and persistent services of the eminent Corvisart to cure him of his malady.

Of all the descriptions of the person of Bonaparte, that of Meneval, his secretary, is doubtless the most correct and satisfying. He says of the Emperor, that, though small of stature, his person was well knit and symmetrical. The bust was longer relatively than the legs. The head was large, and the skull finely developed. The neck was short, and the shoulders proportionally broad. The chest was round and full, indicating a robust constitution. The limbs, both arms and legs, were perfect. The Emperor was as proud as was Lord Byron of his small plump hands and tapering fingers. His forehead was broad and high; his eyes easily kindled with passion and flashed lightnings. His complexion was pallid; bronzed, at first; always of the Italian hue. His dark hair became thin on the top of his head, and the height of the forehead was seemingly increased. Meneval, for thirteen years intimate with his master—observing closely his every mood and feature—says: "His head and bust were in no way inferior in nobility and dignity to the most beautiful statue of antiquity."

Napoleon was capable of all the passions. He showed the inner fires. His anger was easily aroused. He would storm and scowl; but there was always under the tempest a strenuous self-control. The steel sinews of his relentless will held him back ever from rashness of action. When he was angered or crossed, a sort of rotary muscular maelstrom appeared in his forehead and between his brows. His nostrils would dilate under his passion, and his fierce gray eyes gleam hell. Afterwards he would be tranquil, smiling, insinuating, gracious, caressing. Sometimes he would break out in a mocking, sardonic laugh—a thing hollow and dangerous, echoing through Europe.

The new Imperial system quickly diffused itself abroad. Wherever the influence of France extended, the political transformation was easily effected. The Cisalpine Republic was converted into the kingdom of Italy. This Napoleon would make an appanage of his own. For four months, sixteen hours daily, he wrought at the establishment of the new regime in France. He then sped to Milan, and on the 26th of May, 1805, was crowned King of Italy. The ceremonial was in the great cathedral there, second only in magnificence to St. Peter's. The old iron crown of the Lombard kings was brought forth from its dusty keep, and was given by the archbishop of Milan to the Emperor, who, putting it on his head, uttered the famous mot, Dieu me l'a donnee—Gare a qui la touche. "God has given it to me—Beware who touches it!"—an aphorism which became the motto of the Order of the Iron Crown.

The Empire brought four years of continuous war. Napoleon became the trampler of vineyards. His armies made Europe into mire. England—agreeing at Amiens not to fight—fought. Pitt, now in the last year of his life, used all of his resources to bring about a league against France. He persuaded Alexander of Russia, Francis of Austria, and Gustavus of Sweden—all easy dupes of a greater than themselves—to make a new coalition. He tried to induce Frederick William of Prussia to join his fortunes with the rest; but the last-named monarch was for the time restrained by the weakness of prudence. The agents of Napoleon held out to him suggestions of the restoration of Hanover to Prussia. But Austria and Russia and Sweden pressed forward confidently to overthrow the new French Empire. That Empire should not see the end of the first year of its creation!

The Austrians were first in the field. The Russians, under Kutusoff, came on into Pomerania from the East. Out of Sweden, with a large army, came down Gustavus, the Don Quixote of the North, to crush Bernadotte who held Hanover. Napoleon for his part sprang forth for the campaign of Austerlitz, perhaps the most brilliant military episode in the history of mankind. With incredible facility he threw forward to the Rhine an army of a hundred and eighty thousand men. His policy was—as always—to overcome the allies in detail.

On the 24th of September, the Emperor left Paris. The Empress and Talleyrand went with him as far as Strasburg. On the 2nd of October, hostilities began at Guntzburg. Four days afterwards the French army crossed the Danube. On the 8th of the month, Murat won the battle of Wertingen, capturing Count Auffenberg, with two thousand prisoners. On the 10th the French had Augsburg, and on the 12th, Munich. On the 14th Soult triumphed at Memingen, capturing a corps of six thousand Austrians; and on the same day Ney literally overran the territory which was soon to become his Duchy of Elchingen. Napoleon outgeneraled the main division of the enemy at Ulm. The Austrians, under General Mack, thirty-three thousand strong, were cooped up in the town and, on the 17th of October, forced to capitulate. Eight field-marshals and generals, including the Prince Lichtenstein and Generals Klenau and Fresnel, were made prisoners. "Soldiers of the Grand Army," said Napoleon, "we have finished the campaign in a fortnight!"

On the day of the capitulation of Ulm, Massena in Italy drove back the army of the Archduke Charles. The Austrians to this date, in a period of twenty days, had lost by battle and capture fully fifty thousand men! On the 27th of October, the French army crossed the Inn. Salzburg and Braunau were taken. In Italy, Massena, on the 30th, won the battle of Caldiero, and took five thousand prisoners. The French closed towards the Austrian capital. On the 13th of November, Napoleon, having obtained possession of the bridges of the Danube, entered Vienna. He established himself in the imperial palace of Schonbrunn. The Austrian Empire and the Holy Roman Empire—which was its shadowy penumbra—seemed to vanish like ghosts before him.

Out of Pomerania into Moravia, to the plain of Olmutz, the great Russian army, under the Czar and Kutusoff, came roaring. There they were united with a heavy division of the Austrians, under the Emperor Francis. The latter had fled from his capital, and staked his last fortunes on battle in the field. The allied army was eighty thousand strong. Napoleon, with sixty thousand men, commanded by Soult, Lannes, Murat and Bernadotte, advanced rapidly from the direction of Vienna, as far as Brunn, and there awaited the onset. Just beyond this town, at Austerlitz, the French were arranged in a semicircle, with the convex front towards the allies, who occupied the outer arc on a range of heights. Such was the situation on the night of December 1st, 1805. The morrow will be the first anniversary of our coronation in Notre Dame—a glorious day for battle!

With the morning of the 2nd, Napoleon could scarcely restrain his ardor. The enthusiasm of the army knew no bounds. On the night before, the Emperor, in his gray coat, had gone the circle of the camps, and the soldiers, extemporizing straw torches to light the way, ran before him. Looking eagerly through the gray dawn, he saw the enemy badly arranged, or moving dangerously in broken masses under the cover of a Moravian fog. Presently the fog lifted, and the sun burst out in splendor. The onset of the French was irresistible. The allied center was pierced. The Austrian and Russian emperors with their armies were sent flying in utter rout and panic from the field. Thirty thousand Russians and Austrians were killed, wounded or taken. Alexander barely escaped capture. Before sunset the Third Coalition was broken into fragments and blown away. At the conference between Napoleon and Francis, two days afterwards, at the Mill of Sar-Uschitz, some of the French officers overheard the father of Maria Louisa lie to her future husband, thus—"I promise not to fight you any more."

Meanwhile, from the borders of Hanover, the Quixotical Gustavus had taken to flight, and was eager to secure himself beyond the Baltic. On the 24th of December, everything was completed by the Peace of Pressburg. Austria gave up the whole of her Venetian possessions to the kingdom of Italy. The Tyrol, Vorarlberg, and Passau went to Bavaria. The latter country and Wurtemberg were made into kingdoms. For all this the ancient Empire of the Hapsburgs was compensated with Salzburg and some other trifling places, all of which History might hold at a handful!

After Austerlitz the broken Russians fell back towards their own territory. Central Europe seemed to be suddenly dominated by the sword of the Corsican. Pitt, no longer able to bear the strain of the tremendous antagonism, sank rapidly, and died. The glorious victory which Nelson had won in the bloody foam of Trafalgar, on the day after the capitulation of Mack, could not compensate for the Continental ruin. Pitt passed away on the 23rd of January, 1806. Austerlitz and Pressburg are said to have killed him!

A MILITARY WEDDING.

Brilliant Event At Holy Cross Church Last Night.

THE BROOKS-ELY MARRIAGE.

An Elaborate Display of Flowers Combined with the Red, White and Blue and Handsome Gowns, Make Up a Pretty Scene—Groom, Best Man and Ushers All Dressed in Military Clothes.

One of the most brilliant events of the season was the marriage Friday night in Holy Cross church of Miss Marion P. Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Brooks of Rockview avenue, to Lieutenant Frank D. Ely of the Sixth Infantry, U. S. Army, located at Fort Thomas, Kentucky.

It was the first military wedding that has ever been witnessed in this city, and it was charming in every particular.

The front part of the church was tastefully arranged with the choicest of flowers and interspersed were handsome American flags prettily draped, giving a picture of beauty seldom observed.

The church was opened promptly at seven o'clock when a large number of people were awaiting to enter. They were met by LaRoy S. Upton, of the Twenty-first Infantry, of Governors Island, Warren H. Mitchell, of the Second Artillery, of Fort Adams, Rhode Island, James M. Williams, of the First Artillery, of Davids Island, and Dwight E. Altman, of the Second Artillery, of Fort Warren, who were the ushers. They wore the full dress uniform of the U. S. Army and made a handsome appearance.

The bridal party was gowned as follows: Bride, Miss Marion P. Brooks, white satin, trimmed with point lace and chiffon, carrying lilies of the valley; maid of honor, Miss May Sandford, white chiffon, embroidered with silver, carrying white roses; bridesmaids, Miss Anna Stewart, of Plainfield, figured organdie over pink silk, carrying pink roses; Miss Florence V. B. Myers, of New York, figured organdie over blue silk, carrying pink roses; Miss Edith Potts, of New York, figured organdie over yellow silk, carrying yellow roses; Miss Margaret Harrison, of Brooklyn, figured organdie over lilac, carrying yellow roses; Ray and Mabel Hooley, flower girls, and nieces of the bride, pink and baby blue organdie, carrying daisies; groom, Lieutenant Frank D. Ely, and best man, Frank D. Webster, of the Sixth Infantry, of Fort Thomas, full dress uniform of the United States Army.

Organist George Hoskings presided at the organ, and gave a rendition of a choice programme while the guests were being seated. Every seat was taken, and there was hardly standing room when the first notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march was heard. The bridal party entered, preceded by the ushers, then came the flower girls, followed by the bridesmaids, and maid of honor, with the bride leaning on the arms of her father. When near the chancel the party separated, allowing the bride and her father to pass to the altar, where they were met by the groom, the best man, and the pastor, Rev. T. Logan Murphy. The party then formed a circle around the altar, when the service of the Episcopal church was performed by Rev. Mr. Murphy. The father gave the daughter away in marriage. The responses by the bride and groom were noticeably clear. The bridal party left the church the reverse of entering, while the wedding march from Lohengrin was being played.

After the ceremony an informal reception was given at the home of the bride's parents, which was attended by only the relatives and near friends.

The happy couple left town last night for Lake Mohonk, where they will remain a week. They will then return to Plainfield. The latter part of July they take up their residence at Fort Worth, Ky., where Mr. Ely is stationed. The presents received by the bride and groom were very handsome and costly.

YATES—BORDEN.

The marriage of Miss Kathryn Young Yates, daughter of Joseph W. Yates, to Harry Voorhees Borden, took place very quietly at the residence of the bride's parents, at 128 East Seventh street, at five o'clock Thursday afternoon. The ceremony was to have been performed at the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian church, and a large number of invitations had been sent out, but owing to the severe illness of Mrs. Fred W. Yates, the sister-in-law of the bride, the invitations were recalled, as stated in these columns a few days ago.

At the ceremony yesterday only the relatives of the bride and groom were present. The Rev. K. P. Ketcham officiated, assisted by the Rev. William R. Richards.

The maid of honor was Miss Margaret Yates, sister of the bride. The bridesmaids were Miss Marion Dumont, Miss Alice Borden, Miss Margaret Tracy and Miss Grace W. Cooley. The best man was John W. Moore, and the ushers were A. M. Duxbury, L. D. Lovell, William B. Gilbert, E. L. Walz, Jr., Frank C. Cokefair and Andrew McKinney of New York.

The couple will go on a short wedding tour.

ENDEAVOR ANNIVERSARY.

Third Street Mission Have Completed Another Year's Work.

The Christian Endeavor society of the East Third Street mission celebrated their yearly anniversary last night in a most fitting manner. The society of the First Baptist church were present as invited guests, and all had an enjoyable time.

The exercises opened with a song service, assisted by Clifford Braider, pianist, and Robert W. Barnes, violinist.

An address was then made by I. L. Brady, president of the mission society, setting forth the growth and work of the society during the past year. He stated that a native preacher in India was being supported by them.

Dr. D. J. Yerkes followed with an interesting address along the line of Christian Endeavor work and the remarks were helpful.

At the close of the programme cake, oranges and lemonade were served, and the balance of the evening was spent in sociability.

FOR WOMAN SCHOOL SUFFRAGE.

Plainfield's Women Make a Strong Delegation at Trenton.

Trenton, June 4.—A committee of women, consisting of Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of Plainfield; Rev. Mrs. Antoinette Blackwell, of Elizabeth; Mrs. S. R. Krom and Mrs. D. W. Pond, of Plainfield and Mrs. Alexander Christie and Miss Christie, of Bayonne, appeared before Senators Voorhees and Skirm this morning.

Mrs. Hall, who is a daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, acted as chairman. Dr. Hussey, of East Orange, also accompanied the ladies. They urged the passage of an amendment to the Constitution allowing women to vote at school elections. They handed in a number of petitions from all parts of the State in favor of the amendment. The petition from Union county was signed by several thousand names.

Sells Bros. Enormous Shows at Elizabeth, Friday, June 21.

Its fame rests securely on a triumphal success covering almost a quarter of a century. It is worthily accorded the highest niche in the temple of American amusements, and is the strongest evidence of the "survival of the fittest." The royal road to the people's hearts is unwavering integrity and a strict adherence to fixed principles. Sells Bros. policy in organizing "The Big Show of the World" for 1895 is to excel in presenting to the American public an exhibition morally pure and instructive, greater, grander in its zoological, arenic and invincible special features than ever seen before, and marshaling in a glorious unparalleled unity three hundred sterling acts in three rings and two elevated stages, equestriennes, bare-back riders, racers, thirty-horse riders, trained horses, educated ponies, trained elephants, trained hippopatami, trained seals and sea lions, graimaldis, comical clowns, jolly jesters, of all earth's illustrious mid-air and arenic champions. Remember, the price is within keeping of the times, and has been reduced from fifty to twenty-five cents, including a seat for every visitor. Watch for the grand, sumptuous and superb street parade at ten o'clock a. m. (rain or shine) on the day of the exhibition. Special excursions will be run on all lines of travel at reduced rates.

A Remarkable Girl.

The June number of Tales from Town Topics presents as its leading feature a daintily-told story of metropolitan social life, by L. H. Bickford, entitled "A Very Remarkable Girl", which is a very delightful morsel of light summer reading. Despite the spirit of airy cynicism that pervades the story, the contrast that it affords between sterling strength of character and the emptiness of fashionable life is admirable. Cynthia Platte, a girl full of the life and vigor of a western bringing-up, but brilliant in mind as she is daring in her defiance of the conventionalities, captures the reader's affections at once, and there are other characters equally well drawn, and quite as entertaining. Following the novelette comes the customary array of spicy tales, sketches and bits of humorous and sentimental verse gathered from early numbers of Town Topics.—Town Topics Publishing Company, 208 Fifth avenue, New York.

Watchung Avenue Extension.

The Borough Council will meet in regular session Friday evening of this week, when those who desire to be heard in favor of or in opposition to the proposed extension of Watchung avenue will be given a hearing. There has been but little opposition to the project, and in all probability it will eventually be consummated.

ABOUT THE BICYCLISTS.

Difficulties Monte Scott Encountered at Millburn.

CABANNE A WINNER AT ALBANY.

If the Conditions Had Been Proper Scott Would Have Finished First, As Well As Have Won the Time Prize—Tyler and Bald Gave Cabanne a Hard Race—Local Cycling Notes.

Monte Scott, the crack road racer and holder of the world's amateur record for five, fifteen, twenty and twenty-five miles on the road, visited a prominent sporting goods house in New York shortly after the Irvington-Milburn race, and after his wonderful performance of that day he was naturally the centre of attraction. His recital of how he won the Irvington-Millburn time prize and incidents attached to the trip are certainly interesting and show conclusively that had Monte Scott been in anything like condition, he not only would have won the fast time prize easier, but would have been well up at the finish. Scott is engaged in business in Pawtaucket, R. I., and did not train a particle for the Irvington-Milburn road race, and in fact it was at the last moment that he decided to enter. He has been at his business every night until ten or eleven o'clock. He left Pawtucket the day previous to the race and arrived in New York city at eight o'clock in the evening, and not only carried his own wheel, but his baggage as well. He arrived at Cortlandt street, where the bridge across West street rather mixed him up, and, of course, he lost the train he had intended to take for Milburn.

After finally getting under way he told one of the intelligent conductors to let him out at Millburn station. Instead he was taken four or five stations the other side. He got out and rode back to Millburn and in a very timid way approached what was sure to be a crowded hotel. The hotel proprietor refused to grant him any courtesies whatever, and told him the house was full from top to bottom, and that the rooms had, in fact, been engaged for weeks ahead, so, in sheer desperation, Scott turned away. One of the cyclists, who was in the hotel office at the time, recognized him as he turned away, and told the proprietor he was practically the scratch man in the race on Decoration Day. Monte Scott saw he had a friend and went back and told the proprietor he would sleep on a cot, sofa or anything to get a night's rest for the morning's race. The proprietor then relented and put a cot up in one of the halls for him, and this is where the record-holding cyclist secured his night's rest previous to the race.

In the morning he awoke—a sad man, stiff, and in anything but a pleasant frame of mind. He left the hotel and went up the road to another one, which happened to be the headquarters of the Spalding team, where he made his predicament known. The trainer gave him a tip-top rubbing, and a few minutes later saw him off in the great Irvinton-Millburn road race. This shows just what kind of stuff there is in Scott, and it is assured that the next time he is going to ride in a road race he will leave much earlier and be better taken care of.

CABANNE'S CLEVER CYCLING.

Won Two Hard Races at the Albany Tournament.

At Thursday's races in Albany Cabanne took two of the three events, giving him a record of six out of eight open events in which he has competed this season. Cabanne met Tyler and Bald in the contests, and won out on each occasion, the last with a great finishing sprint for the last fifty yards.

In the mile open race Cabanne had a poor position and on the last lap was forced to fall back behind the bunch and then come around. Sims rounded the turn first and Bald shot his bolt at the head of the stretch. The track was not safe for fast riding, there being no bank, but these men forgot the fact, and Cabanne slid through the bunch like a streak, and barely ten yards from home nipped Bald for a bare six inches when the tape was crossed. Tyler fell away on the last lap. The time was 2:19 3-5, good for the track and day. The finish of the two-third mile, open, Class B, was another brilliant coup for Cabanne, who came like mad around the lower bank, caught Bald, and the two passed Maddox and plunged desperately into a duel. In the last twenty yards Cabanne won the contest by a tire's width only, but it was a win, nevertheless. Bald retaliated by taking the half-mile open from the field of eleven, among the number being Cabanne, who ran fifth.

SANCTION FOR ANOTHER MEET.

Crescent Wheelmen May Have Another Day of Races.

The Board of Governors of the Crescent Wheelmen met on Thursday to settle accounts of the Memorial Day Circuit meet. It was learned that the expenses were about $1 000 and the receipts about $1 700 leaving a balance of $700. The members decided that the affair was a complete success in every respect.

The club has received sanction from Chairman Gideon of the Racing Board for a meet on Labor Day, but the members have not fully made up their minds as to what they will do.

Eleven new members were received and two resigned at the meeting.

The Fourth of July celebration was talked of but was laid over till the meeting of the Wheelmen next Wednesday.

The Hudson County Wheelmen have arranged to have 200 tents erected at Asbury Park on Saturday, July 6, for the use of members and their friends during the National League of American Wheelmen meet July 8 to 10 inclusive.

It is now practically settled that Walter Sanger will meet Charles F. Murphy in a series of mile races at the Kings County Wheelmen's meet at Manhattan Beach, June 29th. The winner of two of the three mile heats will be given a prize of the value of $1,000 if the Racing Board of the League of American Wheelmen will sanction such a prize.

Encouraged by the Secretary of War, Major-General Miles and others, preparations have been made for a competitive bicycle road race this week between the postal service and military, the postal service taking a message from Postmaster Hesing, of Chicago, to the Postmaster at New York, and the military a message from Gen. Ruger to Gen. Miles. More than 500 riders and substitutes will be necessary to carry the messages—more than were ever in a race before. The finish is expected to be an exceedingly exciting spurt and will be awaited at an appointed station in New York by Gen. Miles. Medals and prizes for those making the best average time will be given. The time schedule is seventy-two hours. The route after leaving Chicago takes in Laporte, South Bend, Goshen, Ind.; Fremont, Elyria, Painesville, Ashtabula, O.; Northwest Pennsylvania, Buffalo, Batavia, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica, Schnectady, Albany, Poughkeepsie, Sing Sing, Tarrytown, Yonkers, to New York.

Where Mr. Leggett Will Move.

Since the sale of the property on the corner of Park avenue and East Front street to the City National Bank, Howard Leggett is contemplating moving his pharmacy, after his lease expires next spring, to the corner store in the Y. M. C. A. building. In fact, if the Watchung avenue extension project is carried out it is quite probable that Mr. Leggett will make this move.

The Hospital Ambulance.

The Muhlenberg hospital ambulance, which has been in course of construction for the last two months in New York, is expected to arrive in Plainfield at most any time. The manufacturer promised to deliver it by June 1st, but there has been some delay. It will be kept in Roberts' livery stable on North avenue.

All the North Plainfield Councilmen were present at the regular June meeting held last Friday. The minutes of the last regular and adjourned meetings were read and approved. Clerk Arnold presented his financial report ending May 3d, 1895, which was as follows:

Both of the above were received and filed.

Wm. M. Tallman in a communication asked Council to repair Maple avenue. It was referred to the street committee.

In a communication J. P. Humble objected seriously to the opening of Watchung avenue, claiming it would be no benefit and that it would only be used by sporting men, and besides it would levy an unnecessary tax. The letter was received and filed.

The street committee, through Chairman Smith, presented the following report from May 3, 1895, to June 7, 1895, showing the amount of money expended on streets:

Mountain avenue	$280.97
Giraud "	21.87
West End "	48.90
Prospect place	2.00
Rockview avenue	6.00
Myrtle "	19.75
Craig place	9.00
Race street (crosswalks)	5.50
Harmony " "	5.27
Somerset street	127.48
Total	$526.83

The report was received and filed.

The usual budget of monthly bills were presented and after being audited, warrants were ordered drawn for the same.

Mr. Lounsbury stated that the license and marshal committee had arranged to have special marshals on every Saturday night for four hours; also that they had examined the lockup and decided that additional doors were needed. Several of the marshals should be provided with clubs and should have cards with their names on to be distributed among the citizens of the borough.

The appointment of a dog catcher was also deemed necessary. Mr. Lounsbury's report was received and filed. Mr. Smith stated that the work of macadamizing Somerset street would be finished today; also that he had obtained a surveyor to examine the grade in front of the public school with a view to carrying off surplus water when it rained, and that it was found necessary to go to Linden avenue for an outlet. This would remedy the difficulty. He also stated that the last $1,000 appropriation would probably not be touched this year. Mr. Smith offered a resolution, which was carried, that the mayor and clerk negotiate a loan of $1,500 and charge the same to the road account.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that a sum not exceeding $30 be expended to purchase clubs for the marshals, and also one that the same amount be used in placing iron doors in the lockup. Both were adopted.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution that the action of the mayor and council in drawing $197, $81.42, $96,37 in favor of pay roll, be ratified. It was adopted.

Mr. Schutt offered a resolution in which he claimed that Wilson, who was furnishing the borough with crushed stone, had violated his contract because he had not furnished what the contract called for. He recommended that a committee of three be appointed to investigate, and if the charges were sustained, that the contract be declared void.

After considerable discussion by all the members, the motion to adopt the resolution was lost. The street committee will attend to the matter, and see that the borough gets the size of stone needed on the streets.

Mayor Hegeman appointed Benjamin Vandervoort dog catcher, and Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that the appointment be confirmed, which was adopted.

Mr. Lounsbury also offered a resolution that the license and marshal committee secure a suitable place for a dog-pound, and that the dog ordinance be advertised in the Plainfield papers.

Mr. Smith unintentionally played a joke on Mr. Howell that was much enjoyed by the Councilmen. He handed him a petition from residents of Harrison street, who asked to have to have the street macadamized. The petition was presented at the May meeting, and was referred to the street committee for correction. Mr. Smith wanted Mr. Howell to offer the resolution, and instead Mr. Howell started to read the petition, when Mayor Hegeman corrected him.

Mr. Lounsbury offered a resolution that Council advertise for bids to macadamize Harrison street. It was adopted.

It was thought that the Watchung avenue extension matter would come up, but was deferred for one week on a motion, and a large number of citizens went away disappointed as no opportunity was given to voice their opinions on the question of extension.

The papers necessary to present to the Council for the extension of Duer street were not presented, it being thought best to get more signatures of property owners directly interested. It will be presented at the next meeting of Council, however, and undoubtedly the street will be opened this summer.

The Council then adjourned to Friday evening, June 15th.

LIABLE TO BE A ROW.

Westfield Sewer Contractors Won't Employ Resident Italians.

The action of the contractors who are laying the Westfield sewer in refusing to hire any of the resident Italian colony on the work is likely to result in trouble. There are about one hundred able-bodied Italians who live in Westfield, and many of them own real-estate. So far they claim all applications for work made by them have been refused, the reply of the boss being that he did not want any men, while at the same time each train was bringing additions to the force of strange workmen. The local Italian leader says that his friends will wait a reasonable time, and then if they are refused work there will be trouble.

North Avenue Improvement.

Rev. J. P. Taylor has decided to erect a building to be used as an office, on the property betweeen A. D. Thompson's office and "Ted" Cleveley's restaurant, on North avenue.

THE WOMEN CONFIDENT.

Chances For Woman School Suffrage Said to Be Bright.

The committee of ladies, consisting of Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, Mrs. S. Krom, and Mrs. David W. Pond, of Plainfield, Rev. Antoinette Brown Blackwell, of Elizabeth, Dr. Mary D. Hussey, of East Orange, Mrs. Isabella M. Christie and Miss Christie, of Bayonne, Mrs. Sarah Culver, of Ocean Grove, and Miss Philbrook, who has just been admitted to the bar, have spent several days at Trenton this week urging upon the legislature restoration of school suffrage to the women of the state. In every instance the committee was treated with courtesy and consideration, and they believe that the consultations with various committees, notably the judiciary committees of both houses, and with individual members of the legislature, will result in the restoration, at least, of the school suffrage as it has been exercised in the past.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate—Senators Voorhees, Rogers, and Daly—before whom they urged their claims, had promised to report a bill giving women in the cities of the state the same rights in school matters as their rural sisters. But the conference committee only agreed to recommend that the amendment secure to the latter what they enjoyed by statute before the Supreme Court decided it was unconstitutional.

The women urged that as the women of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Ohio, Iowa, Michigan, and many other states, had made good use of their right to a voice in school affairs, there was no reason why Naw Jersey women should not be trusted in a matter in which they are so closely and deeply concerned.

LITTLE IMPORTANT BUSINESS.

The Board of Freeholders Transacted County Bridge Affairs.

The Board of Chosen Freeholders did but little important business at their meeting in Elizabeth on Thursday, principally passing on bridge matters.

The committee on Plainfield bridges reported that they met with the representatives of Somerset county, and agreed to recommend the construction of a low iron truss bridge over Green brook, at a cost not to exceed $1,000. The recommendation was adopted.

Freeholder Westcott offered a resolution that the county road committee be authorized to make repairs to the roads in the manner they believe to be for the best interest of the county. The resolution was adopted.

The keepers of Elizabeth draw bridges were also appointed.

A Profitable Festival.

The Whatsoever Circle, King's Daughters, of Trinity Reformed church, feel very grateful for the large attendance and liberal patronage of those present at their festival Thursand Friday evenings. Last evening the attendance was even greater than the preceding evening, and everything on sale was disposed of.

Prof. P. L. Conde and his symphony orchestra were in attendance and pleased all with their musical programme. The orchestra is composed of the following young men: Clarence Mills, Charles Davis, Raymond McGee, Fermin Ferrer, Walter Serrell, Lindley Hillman, Walter Raynolds and William MacKillop.

The net amount realized is something over $100, and the young ladies will use the money during the summer in His name.

A Talented Divine.

The supply committee of Trinity Reformed Church have been very fortunate in securing such able divines as Rev. J. F. Riggs, D. D., and Rev. J. Preston Searle, D. D., to occupy Rev. Mr. Schenck's pulpit during his illness. Tomorrow Mr. Searle will officiate. Commencing, June 23d, and continuing during July and the first Sunday in August, Rev. James F. Riggs, D. D., of New Brunswick has been secured. Mr. Riggs is a very able preacher, and will no doubt fill Trinity church at each service during his stay in Plainfield. Children's Day services in the Trinity Reformed church tomorrow morning, at 10:30. Address by Rev. J. Preston Searle, D. D., who will also preach at the evening service, 7:45.

Bound to be a Success.

The promotors of the coming semi-annual games of the Plainfield High School Athletic Association are well satisfied with the signs of the field day which promises to be the most successful ever held by the association, despite the efforts of a Plainfield newspaper to injure its prospects by publishing untrue reports concerning the meet.

Easier For the Mail Carriers.

Along the line of improvements in the post office department in this city the letter carriers were supplied yesterday with shoulder saddles which will make it much easier for them in carrying their mail pouches. It is made of steel, well padded underneath, and fastens neatly to a hook on the shoulder. It also has a catch to hold the strap.

GIRLS AT THE BAT.

Great Game of Ball Played at Westfield Yesterday.

Westfield was real sporty Thursday, when the local ball team played a game with a nine entitled the "Champion Young Lady Baseball Players of the World." A large number of kranks from Plainfield were present.

Fences and billboards from the depot to the ball park have for several days been covered with pictures of fair ball tossers in short skirts. Mothers, sisters and sweethearts loudly but vainly denounced the posters.

There were about 1,000 spectators inside the grounds when the manager of the girls' club called "Play ball!"

The girls were the first to the bat. They were dressed in short dresses of orange and black, and under these wore black tights.

Lizzie Arlington, the pitcher for the girls, first faced the pitcher. That individual became rattled and was unable to get the ball over the plate, and Lizzie trotted to first base. Rose Mitchell, who covered first base for the girls, stepped to the place, and, as she vainly pushed the air, remarked: "Oh, pshaw! I'll hit it when I'm in the business a few years longer."

She was relieved of a strike out by being presented with a base on balls. Bertha Gordon, the third basewoman, came next, and a base on balls to her filled the bases.

Dorah Wilson, the short stop, next faced the pitcher with the remark that she would kill the ball. Instead she made a two-base hit and everybody cheered. The fielders of the Westfield club ran away from the ball in their surprise and two runs were made. Kittie Reagan, the left fielder, flied out, and Josephine Douglass succeeded in getting her first base, which placed Dorah on third.

Lizzie Sheldon, the centre fielder, was at the plate when Dorah Wilson stole home. The catcher of the Westfield club saw her coming, but dropped the ball, which was thrown to head her off. He fell down and Dorah jumped over his head and touched the plate. The next girl up was retired and then the girls took the field.

When the home team took their places it was found that the girls had no catcher and that they were also short a second baseman. They finally took Daniel King for catcher and Charles Richardson for a baseman and the game proceeded.

It did not take Lizzie long to get down to business, and in a short time she was putting some hot ones over the plate. From that time the men were retired in almost one-two-three order and the girls won hands down.

Now the Westfield team is wondering if it really can play baseball or if it has been dreaming.

AMATEUR THESPIANS.

A Dramatic Club for Plainfield Will be Organized.

Invitations have been sent out to many people who have been identified with, or interested in, amateur dramatic entertainments that have been given in Plainfield in the past few years, to attend a meeting at the Hillside Tennis club for the purpose of organizing a dramatic club which will in all probibility control all amateur theatricals in this city for the future.

Much interests has been felt in the proposed scheme and a large attendance is expected at this first meeting, which is to take place on Monday evening, June 10th.

For several years The Daily Press has advocated some snch plan as that which is now being discussed by those interested in the formation of the club. With the undoubted talent possessed by our amateurs and the lively interest society has always taken in their productions, the two essentials for a successful club have been provided and it only remains to be proved that the members will be far too sensible and have the success of the organization too much at heart to allow the usual stumbling blocks which stand in the way of dramatic associations to have any weight whatever.

Under the direction of a well orrganized club society plays, which have always been the most interesting events of the season in Plainfield, should be better managed, better acted and if possible, better patronized than ever before.

To Show Off the Finny Tribe.

Rogers, the sea food dealer, is arranging for an attractive exhibition of fish. A large tank is being placed in a front window in the centre of which will be a fountain about eighteen inches high. He will secure a collection of gold and silver fish and as many different varieties as possible. It will probably be ready by Wednesday of next week.

A Strange Passenger.

A North Plainfield woman was the recipient of considerable notice yesterday afternoon as she rode a bicycle through the streets, to the front of which she had securely fastened a live turtle, which she was taking home from market.

CONFEDERATION OF THE RHINE.

Louis and Jerome Bonaparte Made Kings. Prussians Overwhelmed at Auerstadt and Jena—Allied Armies Destroyed at Friedland—Treaty of Tilsit.

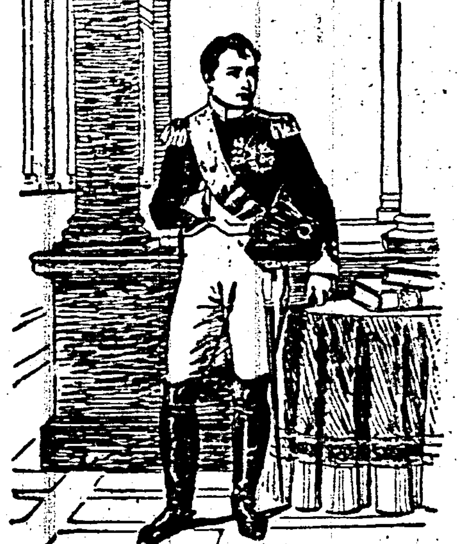
[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XVII.—MAPMAKER AND KING OF KINGS.

After Austerlitz, Napoleon conceded to the Czar of Russia the privilege of retiring! Only a month before, Alexander had been in Berlin. Out at Potsdam, on the 3rd of November, he and Frederick William had sworn a secret mighty oath over the tomb of Frederick the Great. This conjuration with the Czar did not now seem to have been an expedient thing! Frederick, supposing that Napoleon was not informed of his perfidy, sent to the victor at Austerlitz a message of hollow congratulation. The Emperor, on receiving it, said that Frederick William had written the letter, intending it for the Czar, but that fortune had changed the address to himself!

The treaty of Presburg was another peace that did not pacify. Europe was prostrate before Napoleon as far as the Vistula; but England covered all sea coasts from the Adriatic to the Baltic, and the whole Slavic race lay darkly banked on the horizon of the Northeast. The Emperor began at once, with incredible audacity, to make a new political map for the European Powers, and to support it with his under-kings and princes, vassals of France. Influenced by the recent Russo-Austrian coalition, Italy, under the leadership of Ferdinand, king of the Two Sicilies, had hopefully sympathized with the allies. Instigated by his wife, Caroline Maria, sister of Marie Antoinette, the Neapolitan king had admitted into his dominions a division of the Russian army. The cause of offense was sufficient; Napoleon, in January of 1806, sent a corps, under his brother Joseph, to occupy Italy. On the 15th of February, having entered Naples, Joseph was proclaimed king, and the Bourbon monarchy was abolished.

Notwithstanding the intended treachery of Frederick William, the Emperor kept faith with him, and deliverd Hanover to Prussia. The King was reluctant to accept the gift; for Hanover was England's, and he would fain be at one with England. The principalities along the right bank of the Rhine, even from Italy to Holland, were erected into the Confederation of the Rhine. Fourteen princes of Germany voluntarily detached themselves from their Teutonic affiliations, and carried over a population of about sixteen millions to the French protectorate. Napoleon would thus construct a Germanic wall between Eastern Europe and France, protecting the latter against the further incursion of the Austro-Slavic races.



NAPOLEON BY LEFEVRE.

The next step was to convert Holland into a sub-kingdom of France. On the 5th of June, 1806, Louis Bonaparte, to whom, four years previously, Hortense Beauharnais had been married, was proclaimed king of Holland. Out of Hesse-Cassel, Brunswick and parts of Saxony and Prussia, the kingdom of Westphalia was formed, and assigned to Jerome Bonaparte as king. To him—after Tilsit—was given in marriage the princess Catharine of Wurtemburg. In the countries between the Rhine and Poland, extending southward into Italy and northward to the Baltic, a great number of dukedoms and principalities were created and conferred on the marshals of the Empire. Murat, husband of Caroline Bonaparte, was made grand duke of Berg and Cleves. Lannes became duke of Montebello. Junot was presently nominated duke of Abrantes. Bernadotte received the title of prince of Pontecorvo. Ney got his hard-earned dukedom of Elchingen. Berthier was made duke of Neuchatel and Valangin. Soult became duke of Dalmatia. Massena took his honor as prince of Essling. Davout, after a little delay, was made duke of Auerstadt. Bacciocchi, husband of Elise Bonaparte, was created prince of Lucca and Piombino. Eugene Beauharnais was given in marriage Augusta Amelia, daughter of the king of Bavaria, and the title of prince of Venice. The process of king-making and prince-making was limited, not so much by the possibilities of territory as by the number of the Imperial retinue.

Prussia now became a scene of stormy agitation. The humiliated House of Hohenzollern looked in this direction and in that. The younger element of the people and the philosophical patriots cried out against the domination of France. Meanwhile, a strange and far-reaching contingency appeared among the personal forces in Europe. Charles James Fox, successor of Pitt, became Minister of Foreign Affairs, under the premiership of Grenville. Fox would fain have peace. He was not devoid of remote sympathies with France and with Napoleon himself. Courtesies began between him and the Emperor.

In the early summer of 1806, the historical conditions favored a general peace. Both Fox and Napoleon sought it. The Czar would have been willing. Emperor Francis could not interfere. But the establishment of peace involved the restoration of Hanover to England. Talleyrand hinted to the British ministry that this might be done; but Frederick had received Hanover as the price of his late neutrality. To be stripped of it after the fact was to leave him two things—shame and weakness. Nevertheless, affairs went forward favorably; and if If were a thing known to history all might have been well.

Suddenly, however, on the 13th of September, 1806, Fox died; and by the incoming of Lauderdale, the whole complexion was changed. Toryism again ran rampant. The Anglo-Russo-Pruss

Proceedings of the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union County.

[OFFICIAL.]

From the Committee on County Roads:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders.

Gentlemen—In accordance with the custom of the Committee on County Roads we respectfully submit the following report: There have been eight miles of the old county roads repaired, and twenty-one miles of gutters cleaned, this has been done at an expenditure of $14,695.31 which is about three hundred dollars less than the amount appropriated for that purpose.

We are satisfied that the method adopted this last year in repairing the roads by contract, is superior, and much better results have been obtained than the year before, when the work was done by day's work; we emphatically recommend a continuance of the contract system for the future.

The amount of work done on each road was as follows:

Morris Avenue,	8,368	lineal feet
Mountain "	14,911	" "
South "	7,907	" "
North "	6,148	" "
Rahway "	4,744	" "

Nearly all of this work was done with one and one-half inch stone, rolled with a ten ton steam roller, and in our opinion the work has been excellently done, and the contractor, William Chamberlain, and our Inspector, James W. Fink, are entitled to the gratitude of the Board in bringing about such satisfactory results.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Elizabeth, N. J., May 16th, 1895.

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union.

Gentlemen — Your Committee on Appropriations, after carefully estimating the probable necessities of the various departments of the county government: providing for the payment of nineteen thousand dollars ($19,000) bonded debt, maturing during the year, and making ample provisions for the interest charges now falling due on county road and other bonds, are of the opinion, that with an economical and business-like administration of county affairs, notwithstanding the very large increase in court and lunacy expenses over which they have no control, would respectfully report and recommend, that the sum of one hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars ($185,000) together with the sum of twenty one thousand five hundred dollars ($21,500) assets now on hand, be appropriated for the current year, (deducting from said $21,500 the sum of $6,000 set aside for final payment on new county roads).

Your committee would further recommend that the amounts above mentioned be certified to the County Board of Assessors, and placed in the tax levy for 1895, as per accompanying resolution.

To be assessed and collected in the manner and at the times prescribed by the laws for the assessment and collection of taxes in the cities of Elizabeth, Plainfield and Rahway, in said county, respectively: and that the Board hereby direct the assessors of the respective townships and wards in said county to assess the said sum of one hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars ($185,000) on the inhabitants and their estates, agreeable to the law for the time being for the raising of money by taxation for the use of the County of Union, State of New Jersey: and that said assessors meet in the Court House, in the City of Elizabith, on the third Monday in July next, at 10 o'clock a. m., to adjust and ascertain the proportion of said sum to be levied in each township and ward in said county: and that the Clerk of the Board send a copy of this resolution to each of said assessors.

A MAN ADVOCATE.

Sketch of Aaron M. Powell in the Woman's Suffrage Movement.

The Newark Daily Advertiser yesterday published the following sketch of Aaron M. Powell, of this city as one of the active and prominent advocates for the extension of school suffrage to the women of New Jersey:

"It must not be supposed that the only advocates of suffrage in this State have been and are women. Henry B. Blackwell, in writing of those "who were among our most active coadjutors in New Jersey," at the time he and his wife, Lucy Stone, lived here, mentions with the names of the women, the names of the Rev. Arthur Clute, John Whitehead, John Gage and Rowland Johnson.

The State Association and its auxiliary societies have many men members, who in some instances attend the meetings and hold offices. An officer of the State Association is Aaron M. Powell, of Plainfield. Mr. Powell is one of nature's noblemen, and his entire life has been devoted to philanthropic work. The story of all his beneficences is a long one.

He was associated with William Lloyd Garrison, Wendell Phillips, Lucy Stone, and others in the anti-slavery movement. In his character may again be traced the result of Quaker influence, for Mr. Powell is of Quaker ancestry. He represented the Society of Friends, by an address at the World's Fair Parliament on Religions, and was also President of the World's Congress on Social Purity. He has five times crossed the ocean as American member of the executive committee of the International Federation for the Abolition of State Regulated Vice. He crossed the ocean once also to attend an International Prison Congress in London, as a delegate from the Society of Friends.

He is editor of The Philanthropist, a journal published in New York, devoted to the promotion of social purity. His wife, Anna Rice Powell, is associated with him in editorial work. She is the Secretary of the American Purity Alliance, and is President of the newly organized "Equal Rights Society," of Union county.

Was Not a Rattler.

The snake which bit Harry Williams last Friday, and which was on exhibition at the Press office for a day or two, was taken to New York, where Charles Bullman, of this city, and Dr. Bashford Dean, of Columbia college, made an examination of the reptile. It was first thought that it was a rattlesnake, but the examination by these scientific experts proved it to be a Heterodon Platyrhinos, commonly called a hognose adder. It has venomous fangs, but is harmless.

Will Probably Come to Plainfield.

The State Christian Endeavor convention will be held at Atlantic City this year. Paterson has begun active operations for the convention in '96, but the Endeavorers of this city are making a strong effort to bring the gathering to Plainfield, and it is believed that the "Colorado of the East" will triumph. All Union county delegates are enthusiastic for Plainfield.

A JUST COMPLAINT.

Streets Can Be Sprinkled Too Much as Well as Too Little.

To the Editor of The Daily Press :—

Having experienced a good deal of annoyance on account of the condition of our streets recently, I would like to call attention to the excessive flooding by the sprinkling carts. It is impossible to get through them at times on the wheel without getting well decorated with mud and occasionally a good dusting where there is no sprinkling at all. And it is hard to say which is the worst. Can there not be an improvement in the situation, by not having so much water put on at one time, or why could not the city, (which so much has been claimed for), be much improved if the streets could be sprinkled all over alike, and in such a way, we would not be obliged to wade through both mud and dust, and this expense to be met by a proportionate tax upon all the citizens, as it is a benefit to everyone who lives here, if properly done.

I have two little grandchildren who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one-third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my housework. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kansas, was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Sometime ago I was troubled with an attack of rheumatism. I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and was completely cured. I have since advised many of my friends and customers to try the remedy and all speak highly of it. Simon Goldbaum, San Luis Rey, Cal. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. FUMBLING FINGERS LOST.

A BALL GAME FULL OF ERRORS AND MISTAKES.

The Plainfield and Orange Y. M. C. A. Teams Contest, With the Result of the Local Team Losing—The Score.

The Y. M. C. A. ball team outbatted and outfielded their opponents, the Orange Y. M. C. A., and yet were defeated by one run Saturday afternoon. A very slim crowd made its way to the Crescent Oval to witness a game full of errors and mistakes. The Plainfield boys did not put up their usual game, but became unaccountably rattled.

In the first inning a base on balls to Townley and a two-base hit by Schoonmaker brought in one run, and an error by an Orange infielder allowed Schoonmaker to score. The second inning was a most disastrous one to Plainfield. Two base hits started the ball rolling, and before the home team could realize it six men had trotted across the plate. The next two innings netted six runs for Plainfield and two goose eggs for Orange, making the score 8 to 6 in Plainfield's favor. But soon the luck turned, and Orange gathered in five more runs to none for Plainfield. At the end of the eighth inning the score stood 12 to 11 in favor of Orange, and the Plainfield boys made a last effort for victory. Wyckoff got his first on an error by the third baseman, and on wild throws by left field and pitcher finished the circle of the bases. This tied the score, but two easy flies and a strike out closed the inning. Smith struck out for the visitors, but a clean hit sent Page to first. He took second on an error, and Codey secured his base on balls. A passed ball advanced each man a base. Page attempted to get home but was given out at the plate, although the catcher did not touch him. A grounder by Beyer ended the game by bringing in Codey.

Corey occupied the pitcher's box for Plainfield for the first five innings, after which he was removed and Burt substituted. Lack of practice made Burt a little wild, but that he is a coming pitcher was shown by his striking out the first four men in succession. He will be of great value to the Y. M. C. A. during the summer. Dupee, at left, made some very pretty plays, capturing several flies after a hard run and making two beautiful hits between first and second. Schoonmaker did not play his usual game at third, but showed his batting abilities by three hits, two of which brought him to the second bag.

The score by innings was as follows:

Orange............	0	6	0	0	2	3	1	0	1	—13

PASTOR VAN DOREN TO GO.

The Minister Says His Enemies at Spotswood Are Too Many for Him.

Rev. W. A. Van Doren, the Dutch Reformed pastor of Spotswood, a little village in the lower part of Middlesex county, will leave the parish. Through the sympathy of some of his flock he has been allowed to occupy the parsonage until his successor is secured. The pastor does not admit that this is a concession at all, for he says that his term does not expire until October, and his salary is due to that time whether he preaches or not.

Rev. Mr. VanDoren is a man of fifty-five years. His wife is quite a favorite with the people of Spotswood and Old Bridge, which villages furnish the congregation of the Dutch Reformed church at Spotswood, but for a year past the pastor has been in continual hot water.

Rev. Mr. Van Doren said to a reporter: "I have been the victim of a conspiracy. Some few members of the congregation took a dislike to me at the very outset when I came here two years ago. They made sentiment against me until nearly all my friends were turned against me. I deny that I have been too familiar with women. I am still occupying the parsonage, but will not preach in the church again. I am anxious to get out of Spotswood, as my enemies are too many for me.

FATHER M'GINLEY HERE.

Officiated at High Mass in St. Mary's Church Sunday.

Solemn high mass was celebrated in St. Mary's church Sunday morning at 10:30. the celebrant being the Rev. Roger A. McGinley, of New York, who was recently ordained to the priesthood. He was assisted by Rev. Father Smyth as deacon, and Rev. Father Murphy as sub-deacon. The service was very impressive, and the singing. under the direction of choirmaster Cashin, was of a high order. In the afternoon Father McGinley visited the Sunday-school scholars in the parochial school building, and was much pleased with their singing of several hymns. In the evening he officiated at vespers. Father McGinley has many friends in Plainfield, who welcomed and congratulated him, and wished him long life and a successful career in the high vocation he has chosen. Father Murphy preached a very earnest sermon at the high mass.

Kickers Still Kick.

The Westfield Township Committee met Monday night. Owing to the various law suits on hand, and other affairs, there was a large attendance of citizens. Chairman Gardiner reported that many complaints had been made to him about the streets being blocked for the past two weeks by the sewer excavations. The contractor stated that the work of filling in would be commenced Tuesday. The matter of under-drains along the sewer was brought up, and as the specifications concerning them are vague in the contracts, a resolution was passed that they be laid wherever the engineer thought necessary. This is an element of expense not mentioned in the original estimate of cost.

Miss Maxson Entertains.

Miss Mabel Maxson, of West Fourth street, entertained a few friends, Saturday evening, in honor of her cousin, Miss Dexter, of Elmira, N. Y. Dancing and games, interspersed with college songs, made up a very delightful evening. Also piano solos by the hostess were charmingly rendered and enjoyed by all. And last, but not least, were the cooling refreshments of ice-cream and cake, which were very acceptable after the pleasant but warm exercise of dancing. Among those present were: Daniel Dexter, Misses Dexter, of Elmira, N. Y., Miss Rogers, of Florida, Mrs. Maxson, Mr. and Mrs. Rogers, Mr. McClurg, Mr. Peck, Marcus Clawson, Frank J. Hubbard, Harry Maxson, Miss Bessie Titsworth and Miss Tomlinson.

Barry Proclaims Innocence.

Michael Barry, who has been accused of planning the escape of the eight prisoners from the Middlesex County Jail, has written a letter for publication denying this charge and others. Barry is in jail charged with incendiarism and robbery. The three tramps, Williams, Fisher and Kelly, who were alleged to have been his accomplices, escaped last week and are still free. Without them the State has a poor case against Barry, it is said.

Will Find Good Subjects That Day.

The W. C. T. U. are arranging to have an attractive float in the Fourth of July parade. They will also be seen in other department of work on that day.

TO DO MORE ACTIVE WORK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS HOLD AN ENTHUSIASTIC RALLY.

Timely and Practical Suggestions As to the Most Effective Plans to Be Pursued Are Discussed.

A very lively and profitable June rally of the local Christian Endeavor union was held in the Crescent Avenue church last Monday. The attendance was excellent and the service very interesting. The main thought during the meeting was how a Christian Endeavorer should spend vacation time.

A chorus choir of one hundred voices, under the efficient leadership of H. J. Martin, rendered excellent music.

The service was opened by the singing of "Coronation," after which Rev. C. E. Herring offered prayer. The selection "How Firm a Foundation" was then sung, and Mr. Herring read the Scripture selection. A pleasing feature followed when the State Christian Endeavor hymn, "Forward Endeavorers," was sung by those in attendance.

President E. E. Anthony presided, and in opening stated the object of the meeting and gave many pointed and helpful suggestions. He then introduced Rev. C. E. Herring, who gave a ten-minute address on "How to spend vacation."

He told in an interesting and practical way how a Christian Endeavorer could spend their vacation with profit by enthusing the Christian Endeavor spirit into those who knew little or nothing of the society.

The singing of the new hymn, "Boston, '95," was heartily joined in by all.

A short business session followed, during which Secretary Miss Florence Hawkins read the minutes of the previous meeting, which were approved.

Then came an interesting part of the programme, when the Christian Endeavor society of the Crescent Avenue church was admitted to the Union. The Endeavorers sang "Blest Be the Tie," while all joined hands.

A very instructive and helpful feature was the open parliament led by E. E. Anthony. The same line of thought of how to spend vacation was the subject. The responses were quick and interesting and the ten minutes passed all too quickly.

Among the suggestions were that a Christian Endeavor society be established at a boarding house or hotel, and that those living at that place be made to feel an interest. Another was that no Christian Endeavorer should go where they could not take Christ. One Endeavorer present told how a friend had started a society during vacation. She had sought the acquaintance of a friend, and interested her in the work. She became converted, and she in turn sought another friend, and in this way a strong society was formed. Mr. Anthony spoke at the close and threw out additional hints and suggestions.

During the offertory Miss Bessie Blair rendered in a very acceptable manner a soprano solo, "Clinging to the Crucified." She was accompanied on the organ by Howard Case, who was the organist of the evening.

A RESTFUL SPOT.

Hotel Netherwood Opened With Prospects of a Successful Season.

The Hotel Netherwood was opened last Saturday under the management of John Spitler, who has had extensive experience in catering to the summer trade of first-class houses in Saratoga and elsewhere. The house has been thoroughly renovated and repaired throughout, and now presents a handsome appearance with all the improvements of a modern hotel.

The lawns and surrounding shrubberry afford much shade and give a charming aspect of rural beauty. While the house will be free from the busy and noisy turmoil of the sea shore hotels there will be just enough social gaiety with the weekly hops which Mr. Spitler intends inaugurating to relieve the monotony that might otherwise ensue. The music will be furnished by Prof. Gioscia's orchestra, who will give recitals each day.

Progressive Merchants.

At the meeting of the Retail Merchants' Protective Association, of New Brunswick, Friday, it was decided that every member would close his store at seven p. m. between June 20th and September 1st. They also decided to close all day on July 4th. The committe which has charge of the scheme to have a government post-office building in New Brunswick has interested several other local organizations, which will appoint committees and act jointly with the Merchants' Association in carrying out this project.

JENNIE WAS A SCORCHER.

THE PARKINSON GIRL GAVE MARSHAL VAN HORN A RACE.

She Stole $18 From Between the Sheets, And When the Officer Went to Arrest Her She Took French Leave.

It is not very often that the quiet little borough of North Plainfield is disturbed to any extent, but yesterday morning such was the case and it was a lively time, too.

Willard Smith, who lives on Greenbrook road, reported to Chief Marshal VanHorn that Jennie Parkinson, a seventeen year old servant girl in the employ of his father at the house on Greenbrook road, had extracted $18 from beneath the sheets of his bed where he kept his pocketbook every night.

The chief went over to the house to get the girl and told her that she was wanted and that she must get ready to go with him. She asked for permission to go to her room, and while the chief was talking to Mrs. Smith, the girl took French leave out of the back door and the chief reached there just in time to see her escape. He gave chase at once but the fleet-footed maiden was a considerable distance ahead and as the two sped on they came no closer together. Through Wilson avenue to Chestnut street to Harrison street the duo traveled and then the chief thought that by crossing a lot he could catch the girl but he failed.

John Hensey, the painter, with his horse and wagon was seen passing by and the chief jumped into the wagon and asked the owner to drive fast so he could capture the flyaway, but after a few blocks had been covered the horse lost his wind, and the knight of the club had to continue on foot.

He followed the girl around Rockview terrace, Mercer, Myrtle and Giraud avenues, but faster and faster she kept moving. He then met John H. Kitchen with a horse and surrey and his rig and services were called into service, and the chase was renewed.

In the meantime the girl had gained on them by fifteen minutes, and the chief and Mr. Kitchen followed. They went by way of Grant avenue and when Clinton avenue was reached they saw the girl and taking courage urged the horse on. Chief VanHorn took off his hat so the girl would not recognize him and then when they got near her he asked Mr. Kitchen to get out and catch her, which he accommodatingly did. She was brought to the borough station house and locked up.

Arrested For Riding on the Sidewalk.

Residents of the West End on Front street near Grant avenue, have complained considerably to Chief Grant about the many cyclers who persist in riding on the sidewalk in that vicinity. The chief stationed James Totten at that place yesterday and he succeeded in capturing three, who were Harry Thomas, of Saratoga, Tax Collector S. Trimmer, and John Criss, of Roselle. They were brought to the city and their wheels put in the rookery. Chief Grant acting under instructions from Judge Coddington told the men that unless they would put up security, they would have to remain over night. They, however, left the wheels as security and said they would come back today and settle, but as yet they have not made their appearance.

To Check Cohn's Actions.

The members of the Westfield Township Committee have commenced suit in the name of the township for $1,000 each against John M. C. Marsh, Township Assessor, and A. K. Gale, Township Collector. It is claimed that they have been charging the township excessive fees for performing their duties. The summonses are issued out of the Supreme Court and are returnable June 19. These suits may check the action which L. G. Cohn has petitioned the Supreme Court to allow him to bring in the names of the people of the township for the same purpose.

Credit to Himself and Plainfield.

Graduates from the Plainfield High School have always stood high in their studies and Arthur H. Serrell, of Plainfield avenue, is no exception to the rule. He graduated as president of the class of '93 and entered Lehigh University. He has just finished his sophomore year and his standing was so high during the last year that he was excused from the final examinations, his record being one of the best in the class. On Friday he leaves for Charleston, S. C., where he will visit his college chum, Reynolds.

The First to Start.

The Omer C. Moore Association have already commenced to build their float for the Fourth of July parade.

WEDDED AT HIGH NOON.

Miss Mary Oppie of Griggstown Becomes Mrs. Walter Timmis.

At high noon Tuesday Walter S. Timmis, of this city, was united in marriage to Miss Mary Oppie, daughter of Wm. Oppie, of Griggstown, in the Reformed church in that village, Rev. J. L. Southard officiating. The Episcopal service was used.

The maid of honor was Miss Mary E. Robinson, of this city, and the best man, George Clissold, of Bound Brook. The ushers were Harvey Boice, of Griggstown, and J. A. Robinson, Frank Howland and Wm. Jessop, of this city. Mrs. W. A. Freeman presided at the organ.

There were guests from New Brunswick, Franklin Park, Bound Brook and other places, and besides those already mentioned there were from this city the Misses Hart, Mrs. Robinson, Miss Seeds, Miss Sebring and Mr. Cashin.

The bride was attired in a gown of white corded silk cut en train, and looked very charming. She carried a bouquet of bride's roses. The church was tastefully decorated.

A reception was held immediately after the ceremony at the home of the bride, and was followed by a splendid collation.

Mr. Timmis will take his bride to Europe on a visit to the home of his parents. He will return in August and take up his residence in this city. Mrs. Timmis is an accomplished performer on the piano.

WIDOWS WORDY WAR

Rushed the Duck and Brought Up in Police Court.

Mrs. Nora Edmunds and Mrs. Monica Moffett, widows, living in the Boulevard, met last Tuesday and exchanged some personal remarks that resulted in a fistic encounter.

Previous to this episode they had been "chasing the duck" and were in good condition mentally to administer the proper doses of oral invective, but physically they were not so capable of indulging in the necessary adjuncts of pugilistic blows incident to wrathy minds. Policeman Flanagan arrested the women, and when they appeared before Judge Coddington their tongues were let loose and they told the Judge all they knew and some they didn't know. The latter finally told them that if there was any further trouble he would send them to jail, and the only thing that prevented that decision was the fact that they had children, but that would cut no figure next time. They were placed under $100 bonds to keep the peace.

Elizabeth School Children.

The school census of Elizabeth, which has just been completed, shows there are 5,333 boys and 5,259 girls of school age, or a total of 10,592 in the city. An unusual feature is that the boys lead the girls by seventy-four in the grand total, while in seven out of the twelve wards the girls are ahead. The enumerators report 421 colored children in the city. There are fifty-nine children under fifteen years of age employed in factories and five deaf mutes.

The school census of Rahway, taken by Joseph R. Rollinson and William H. Miller, show a gain of more than 100 over the attendance of last year. The total is 1,861.

Verdict For the Editor.

The famous small potatoes case of J. Alfred Potter, editor of the Cranford Chronicle, against the Cranford Township Committee was brought up before Justice Newcorn this morning. Mr. Potter printed envelopes for the town collector, T. A. Crane, and when the bill of $5 was presented the committee refused to audit it. After hearing the evidence Justice Newcorn rendered a verdict in favor of Mr. Potter, together with the costs, which makes the amount $8.50.

A Reconciliation.

The trouble between Henry H. Isham, of Brooklyn, the former large land-holder in Elizabeth, and his wife, Juliet Calhoun Isham, which led to divorce proceedings being instituted by Mr. Isham in a Brooklyn court, has been amicably settled and all further proceedings in the matter have been discontinued. This explains why Mrs. Isham signed her consent to the big transfer of real-estate held by her husband in Union county to Judge P. H. Gilhooly, of Elizabeth.

Jack, the Pointer, in Trouble.

"Jack, the Pointer," bought some meat in a butcher shop on Somerset street Saturday, and in about an hour returned and complained that wrong change had been given him. He tried the same scheme in another store, but it didn't work. Chief Marshal Van-Horn placed the fellow under arrest for awhile, and finally let him go.

THE CANTATA PRESENTED.

"OUT IN THE WOODS" ACTED BY IRVING SCHOOL STUDENTS.

A Large Audience Present—The Profits to Be Devoted to Replenishing the Library—The Participants.

This is the great season of the year for picnics and the cantata, "Out in the Woods," which was given in the Irvig School hall last Tuesday, came most appropriately. The object of the entertainment was to supply funds for enlarging the library and the worthy cause, combined with the promise of a most enjoyable evening, completely filled the hall, while many stood around the sides of the room. Tasteful decorations of greens and red, white and blue bunting greatly changed the appearance of the hall and the bright faces of the pupils added much to the effect.

Miss Hattie Filmer acted as conductor of the singing, with Miss L. W. Stillman as accompanist. The programme opened with an enjoyable selection by Mrs. F. A. Pollock, piano; J. Z. Petrie, violin; F. A. Pollock, flute. A pretty duet by Miss E. C. Benz, zither, and J. Z. Petrie, violin, followed.

The story of the cantata was very simple. A number of children, under the guidance of Grandma, Miss Annie Peterson, go out to spend a day in the woods. Miss Bertha Mitchell is chosen queen and sings. Then while the girls are singing and playing the boys go out, but soon return with the startling news that there are a strange little people near at hand, and scarcely have they finished telling their experiences when the strange creatures, which prove to be the planets, come in sight and march upon the stage, and each recites a selection about himself; then they march out again. More singing by the children is in progress when a thunder storm approaches and they take shelter in a neighboring house.

The artifical thunder crashes, while the electric lights turned rapidly on and off, again serve as lightning. The storm passes over and the children return. During these last scenes there were songs by Miss Annie Kinsman, Miss Mabel Ayers and Miss Emma Craig, and recitations by Miss Maggie Burke, Miss Carrie Haffner, Miss Edith Robinson and Miss Bessie Walls.

A little gypsy girl, Miss Nettie Haffner, joins them after the storm and sings of her life in the forest, but while they are singing to her she disappears. Here recitations are given by Miss Wenona Dodds and Miss Maggie Porter. The girls go in search of the gypsy girl, while the boys remain, and Cyrus Kinsman, Arthur Utzinger and George Whitely give a song and recitation. The girls re-enter with the gypsy and after more singing join in their parting song, and thus ends the holiday in the woods. The various planets were represented by the following:

Jupiter, Lester Woodruff; Moon, Miss Sophia Saums; Earth, James Gray; Venus, Miss May Batchelor; Uranus, Miss Jessie Stewart; Neptune, Fred Soper; Saturn, Percy Hand; Mercury, Miss Cathie Rocap; Mars, Paul Otto; and Cornet, Irven De Hart.

During the intermission in the cantata, there was a flute solo by F. A. Pollock, which was executed in his usual masterly manner, a vocal selection charmingly rendered by Miss Hattie Filmer, and an amusing recitation by Miss M. E. Winters, who kept her audience in roars of laughter with the selection "Apples."

The affair was under the supervision of Miss Genevieve Petrie, whose energetic efforts were ably seconded by the other teachers.

In the first part of the evening the electric current seemed to be a minus quantity, and an attempt was made to light the hall with lamps, but the current reappeared and all went on smoothly, and in a manner reflecting great credit upon the originators.

A COLLEGE COURSE.

ITS VALUE TO YOUNG MEN DISCUSSED BY DR. DEPEW.

He Believes It a Good Thing, Though Not Essential to Business Success. College Men Have Qualifications, However, Rarely Attained in Other Pursuits.

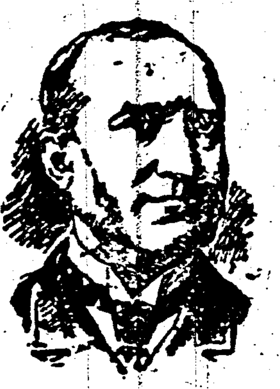
How much of practical value is to be got from a college course by a young man about to engage in business or a profession has always been, and will continue to be, a mooted question.

It is generally understood that Chauncey M. Depew believes in the modern university, and that he is in about as close sympathy with the college student to-day as when he was himself a student at Yale. But while Mr. Depew believes that the college bred young man has much the better chance in the race of life, still he does not consider the college training of these times altogether faultless.

In a recent interview in the New York Herald Mr. Depew says:

"In one respect the graduates of 1895 are far behind those of 1855. Few of the boys who will leave college this year will be good talkers. They may be as good thinkers as those who were graduated four decades ago—better, for all I know. They may be able to grasp business and scientific problems as readily, but they will not be nearly so capable of telling what they know or what they think as the older chaps. Why? Because of the decline of the bebate as a means of training. There were debating societies in college when I was a student, and all the brightest men belonged and took part in the discussions. Nowadays few college students would think of stooping so low as to belong to a debating society or of engaging in a set discussion of any problem. I regard this as a national calamity, which, however, is mitigated to some extent by the fact that, while the debating club has been practically abandoned by the college boy, it has been taken up by the workingman, who by its use, as he could by no other means, is clarifying his mental vision as to certain matters.

"As to the advantage of a college training in actual everyday business and professional life," Mr. Depew went on, "there is to say: Some exceptionally strong men there be, in the aggregate, indeed, a great many of them, who seem to get through life as well without the knowledge and training acquired at a college as if a full course had been taken. Yet it is my opinion that these men, even those of marked success, would have done better had they been college trained. They might not have risen higher, but the rise would probably have been easier, and, on the whole, more satisfactory to them. To the average man the college course is extremely valuable. It teaches him how to use his mental powers; how to reason from cause to effect and back again; how to concentrate his energies; how to adapt himself quickly to suddenly changed conditions. Whoever would succeed in real life must get this training somehow, and in my judgment it is better to get it in college than while 'sweeping out the office.' If the 'sweeper out' gets ahead of the college boy in business, in his profession, or in public affairs, depend upon it, is because of superior native ability, harder work or greater endurance. It is in spite of the lack of college training, not because of it. I know that as a rule the great corporations of to-day choose heads of departments mostly from the ranks of college graduates holding subordinate places, not because of the mere possession of diplomas by the graduates, but because the college man so often displays more ability, sounder reasoning, better judgment and quicker decision. But the young man who cannot get to college should not be discouraged by this state of things—he should work and study all the harder.



CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

"As a matter of fact," continued the speaker, "almost any young man who really wishes to do so can go to college. It is as easy to work your way through now as it ever was.

"Physical training? I do not believe it is overdone except in a few cases—so few, indeed, as to be hardly worth considering. There are some in every college class who carry athletics and gymnastics to the extreme. But for the mass, I believe the present system has wrought wonders. When I went to college few students took physical exercise at all, and beyond an occasional farmer's son, who had developed his body by pitching hay and walking in the furrow behind the plough, most students were Bible-backed and hollow-chested. Now, however, it is not so. The average college graduate of to-day has a broad and deep chest and plenty of muscle, and stands up straight. He is physically superior to most men he meets, and his extra bodily strength will be found to be of substantial advantage through life. If the young college man of to-day only knew how to talk he would be invincible."

Mr. Grogan Explains It.

"Daddy," asked little Danny Grogan, "what is this new woman business, anyhow?"

"It means," said Mr. Grogan, after a moment's thought, "thot instid av a man an' his wife bein' wan anny moore, thot now he is one man an' she is another, be dad."—Cincinnati Tribune.

ROBBING A STATE.

DISCLOSURES BY AN INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE IN NEW JERSEY.

Some State Officers Regarded Public Office as a Private Snap and Evidently Worked Along That Line of Reasoning. An Astonishing Condition of Rottenness.

The report of the New Jersey Senate investigating committee, which was making inquiries into the frauds and extravagancies of the State Government and into the doings of the Board of Pardons, records some queer transactions.

"Of the ninety-seven witnesses examined," the report says, "by far the greater number have testified under compulsion, and little information has been volunteered. Enough, however, has been disclosed to indicate the course of events in recent years at the State House, and to suggest legislation for guarding against a recurrence of similar irregularities."

Concerning the cost of caring for the Capitol the report says the expense increased from $25,000 in 1889 to $71,000 in 1894, but this latter sum by no means covered the cost for repairs, maintenance and furnishing. Concerning the sale of the old and the purchase of the new furniture for the Capitol between 1889 and 1894, the report says some parts of the building were furnished twice. Some of the money realized from the old furniture has never been paid into the treasury. "In the making of this substitution the State was cheated and betrayed. The prices were exorbitant, being often double the usual retail price of the goods. Bills were falsified in quantities and prices. Large bonuses and commissions were paid to State officers. Furniture and carpets paid for by the State were sent to persons holding offices under the State for their private use.

"In the furnishing of coal, lumber and other supplies for the State House, there was deliberate systematic swindling. By the collusion of a State Comptroller, and in the face of the protest of other State officers against the waste, the State paid $21,847 for the construction of pigeon holes and similar appliances which could readily have been obtained for $7,500. More than $10,000 was paid to one painter upon bills wherein false entries of labor and material had been made, the price likewise being exorbitant, the peculation being probably $4,000.

Ventilating apparatus cost $25,896, a full price for which would have been $13,923; a similar apparatus in the Senate Chamber cost $21,625, a full price for which would have been $11,102.

"Where gross overcharges and false charges occur," the report says, "the evidence warrants the belief that it was always by the collusion or acquiescence of some State officer or employe."

The report says the ordinary expenses of the State have grown from about $800,000 in 1875 to $1,653,000 in 1894. The increase is largely due to the multiplication of State officers and State boards, the expense of maintaining the Capitol, and the increased cost of the courts and of maintaining the militia. Including the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures, the public debt payments and the amount raised for the support of the public schools ($2,196,240), the entire sum expended in 1894 was $4,126,495.

The increase of the expenses of the Legislature from $53,578 in 1875 to $125,249 in 1893 is explained mainly by increase of officers and reckless extravagance in purchasing legislative supplies.

Concerning the methods adopted by Col. Van Cleef, the Secretary of the Board of Assessors, in his map transactions, the report says that no more than 8,600 maps were furnished, although the State paid for 41,000. "These facts show deliberate fraud by the Secretary, great carelessness on the part of the members of the Board and their other employes, and careless conduct on the part of the printers who year after year presented to the State sworn bills for maps which they had neither furnished nor seen."

The Court of Pardons gets more space than any other topic in the report. The committee's conclusion is that "the Board of Pardons has lost the confidence of the people, and it is scarcely too much to say that some of its actions in recent years are a public scandal."

The Evangeline Hamilton case, it declares, was scandalous, and the releases of thirty-two of the convicted election officers of Hudson county in 1892, the four Clifton race track men in 1893 and the Big Four of Guttenburg recently, are quoted, with some other cases, as outrages upon the common sense and decency of the community.

Leaps of a Mountain Sheep.

No; the mountain sheep does not leap from great heights, and land either upon his horns or his feet. He knows the strength of his materials too well to try it. His horns and skull might successfully withstand the shock, but the weight of his body would break his spinal column in two or three places, to say the least of it.

It is true that when hard pressed a heard will sometimes plunge down a terrible steep incline, sliding and bounding from point to point, until they plough into the "slide rock" below; but as to leaping over a sheer precipice, I have never saw anyone who claimed to have ever seen such a thing.

The old rams often fight by butting each other terifically, and often splinter or sometimes break off the ends of their horns that way.—St. Nicholas.

TRUE REFORMERS ENTERTAIN.

Musical and Literary Programme Rendered at Their Hall.

It was half past nine o'clock Friday evening before North Star Fountain, No. 717 and East End Fountain, No. 725, United Order of True Reformers, commenced their entertainment, but there was a good-natured audience present, who had no difficulty in passing the time in genuine sociability.

The affair was held in True Reformers Hall on West Front street and the room was filled with the members and their friends.

The programme opened with the singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," after which State Organizer Burgess, of Roselle, who was master of ceremonies, made a few remarks and introduced Mrs. Josephine Hunt, New York State Secretary of the True Reformers. Mrs. Hunt has an excellent education and talked intelligently on the principles and objects of the order. Her remarks were interesting as well as entertaining.

Mr. Burgess then followed, giving a history of the order in detail. He quoted facts and figures that strengthened the faith of each member and won many new ones.

During the evening a musical programme was rendered by Mrs. Mayhew and Fred White, pianists, Israel Jones, cornetist, Miss Anna Hampton, vocalist, and Samuel Fields, violinist. Each number was fully appreciated and enjoyed. After the above was concluded all were given an opportunity of helping the Fountains to furnish their hall by purchasing refreshments.

Those in charge as committees were as follows:

Committee of faithful and earnest workers—Mrs. S. M. Fields, Mrs. J. A. Saunders, Mrs. E. E. Smith, Mrs. P. Gordon, Mrs. Wm. Manning, Mrs. M. J. Carthom, Mrs. Francis Scott, Mrs. Bettie Teter, Mrs. C. Langford, Mrs. H. Jones, Mrs. M. Johnson, Miss Sarah Hegeman, Miss Sophia Woolson, Miss L. Saunders, Mrs. B. Gibson, Mrs. Ed Saunders.

Committee of arrangements—J. A. Saunders, L. L. Croom, W. H. Cheek, J. H. Saunders.

The names of the places to be visited are familiar to all and suggestive of wonderland. No matter how much may be expected, one cannot be disappointed in Watkin's Glen, Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands, Quebec, Montreal, Au Sable Chasm, Lakes Champlain and George, Saratoga or the Highlands of the Hudson. The dates fixed for the departure of these two tours are July 16th and August 20th, and the round-trip rate of $100 for New York, Brooklyn, Newark, Trenton, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Baltimore, and Washington will cover all necessary expenses during the time absent. A beautiful descriptive itinerary can be procured from the tourist department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, 1196 Broadway, New York, or Room 411 Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

Wedded Thirty-one Years.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel F. Randolph, at South Plainfield Tuesday evening, celebrated the thirty-first anniversary of their wedding. The house was beautifully decorated with potted plants and flags. Vocal and instrumental solos were given, and dancing was a feature of the evening. Games were played. J. A. Braint gave a speech, impersonating a negro minister. Isaac F. Randolph kept the audience in laughter with his funny sayings. Miss Amanda Randolph sang a solo. At midnight a repast was served to about fifty couples. Guests from Elizabeth, Rahway, Newark and Plainfield were present. Many handsome presents were received.

Cleaning Up Rahway.

The Rahway city authorities are making a vigorous war on all tin signs and placards nailed upon fences and walls. Street Commissioner Stelle and his men will go the rounds of the city and remove all such advertising not on the billboards. There is a prohibiting ordinance on the city books, but it has been a dead letter many years. Arrests will be made for nailing up signs. An effort will be made to prevent people from sweeping dirt into the streets.

State Normal Schools.

The seventh annual meeting of the Alumni Association of the New Jersey State Normal and Model Schools will be held on the annual Commencement Day, Wednesday, June 19th at twelve m., in the study-room at Trenton. An interesting programme has been prepared, including the name of Hon. Robert S. Woodruff and others prominent in the historp of the Alumni.

GOVERNOR'S SOUND WORDS.

REASONS FOR VETOING THE COURT OF PARDONS BILL.

Rules Sought to Establish Have Been Practically in Operation for Year—Other Measures.

The Governor sent Thursday to the Senate his veto of the bill which provides that petitions to the Court of Pardons must be filed thirty days before being acted upon. He says that under the Constitution the Board of Pardons is not a court. He says the Legislature has no power to limit the constitutional power of the board; that it cannot in any way interfere in the free exercise of its functions; that if the Legislature could regulate it it could also destroy it. The board is a law unto itself in the same sense as the Legislature. The rules sought to be established have practically been rules of the board for years. The Governor intimates that the bill was drawn by a person who does not understand the constitutional relation of the Board of Pardons to the Legislative department. He also says it is doubtful if the Board of Pardons was within the scope of the investigating committee's duties. He also says the executive department should have been apprised of the inquiry and given an opportunity to explain certain matters.

In his veto message the Governor says:

"I shall not notice that part of the committee's report which ascribes the political upheavals of the last two years to the race-track issue. That issue, while an issue, doubtless had its effect, and properly so, but in the fall of 1893 it had practically ceased to exist, and in the fall of 1894 was actually dead. No man is so visionary as now to hope or expect its revival. It would be impossible to enact in this State any such law as that recently enacted in New York legalizing horse-racing or race-tracks, where the usual attendants upon horse-racing are sure soon to follow. The political revolution in New Jersey is to be attributed to the same causes and influences which produced like effects elsewhere. It is not necessary in the hope or desire to advance partisan ends to ascribe it to dead issues or improper motives on the part of conscientious officials."

The Newark partisan bills went through the Senate over the Governor's veto under a raking fire from the Democrats yesterday morning. In the Republican caucus some of the Senators were in favor of dropping the bills and refusing to listen further to the demands of Major Lentz and the other Newark politicians who are anxious to make a dictator out of Mayor Lebkuecher. They claimed that the bills have done enough injury to the Republican party, and that it could not afford to pass upon measures which are plainly unconstitutional as well as undemocratic.

HOSPITAL TO RECEIVE ATTENTION.

City Officials Will Endeavor to Have City Cases Admitted.

The matter of taking care of persons who are ill, at the hospital, when they have no money or friends, will no doubt receive the attention it deserves at an early date. The city of Plainfield directly and indirectly pays into the hospital treasury a sufficient amount of money each year to meet the few cases, a sample of which was seen yesterday. Every year the several churches in the city have a special day set aside at which time an offering is made for the hospital, and the benefits derived directly by the city are very small in comparison.

Through the courtesy of Joseph Bird, Court Deputy of Court Plain-Plainfield, The Press has received the following interesting facts concerning the Independent Order of Foresters: During the month of May the number of applications for membership received by the medical board was 4,022, of whom 3,611 were accepted, showing an advance of over 500 on the highest number of applications ever received in any one month. The surplus fund of the order on the 1st of June showed the high total of $1,317,000. On the 30th of May the corner stone of the Foresters' Temple was laid by His Excellency, the Earl of Aberdeen, Governor-General of Canada, in the presence of an immense concourse of Foresters and their friends. The Temple will be eight stories high, and will be the finest fraternal headquarters on the continent. The Forestic year closes on the 30th of June, and is every particular it will be the most prosperous year in the history of the order. The increase in the surplus has been $360,000, and in the membership about 18,000. For the month of June it is expected that at least 5,000 applications will be received. During the year new Courts have averaged 35 per month. The Supreme Court will meet at St. Martin's Town Hall, Trafalgar Square, London, England, on the 1st day of August. The High Court of Ontario will meet at London, Ontario, on the 8th of October.

To Be Tried Out of Jersey.

The case of the alleged post office thieves, Killoran, Allen and Russell, who were thought to have been the First National bank thieves, which has been up before Commissioner Shields in New York several times, was up again yesterday. The finding of an indictment in Illinois induced the Government yesterday to abandon the case against them in New Jersey, and to commence an examination of the Illinois witnesses, it being their purpose to take them to the latter place for trial instead of to New Jersey.

Victory for Plainfield Grocers.

J. A. Smith this morning received a message from Trenton stating that the wife property bill was passed over the veto of the Governor by the Legislature. The Plainfield grocers have been among the most active advocates of this measure and its passage is a victory for them. It holds the property of the wife for the payment of the necessities of life.

MARRIAGES AT TWILIGHT.

THE MORTON-BOHL NUPTIALS CELEBRATED.

A Pretty Borough Wedding Last Night—The Bride, Handsomely Gowned, Given Away By Her Uncle.

The marriage of William Henry Bohl to Miss Mary Wilhelmina Morton took place at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Martha Morton, No. 8 Stone street, Thursday at half-past seven o'clock. The house was prettily decorated with daisies. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Herbert F. Randolph of Grace M. E. church. The bride was given away by her uncle, James P. Homan. The bride wore a traveling fawn color cloth suit, trimmed with white satin, pearl buttons, and ribbon. She carried a bouquet of white roses. The bridemaid was Miss Etta VanBuskert, who wore a gray crepon trimmed with green. She carried a bouquet of pink roses. The best man was Augustus Bahr, of New York, cousin of the groom. The wedding march was played by Thomas Hughes of this city. The presents were handsome and useful. After the ceremony was performed a bountiful supper was served and an hour of social time was spent. There was about one hundred relatives and friends present, many from New York, Newark, Elizabeth and Somerville. The young couple left under a shower of rice and good wishes for Philadelphia, where they will leave today for Washington. On their return they will reside on Stone street in the house lately built and furnished by Mr. Bohl.

JUDGE NASH ENTHUSIASTIC.

He Makes a Hustling Fourth of July Director.

Vincent W. Nash, chairman of the Fourth of July committee, is doing excellent work in arousing enthusiasm for the celebration.

Since his election to the position he has been visiting the various lodges at their meetings and has given to each a general outline of the work to be accomplished.

There are many societies who have not as yet been heard from and he desires that all send representatives to the meeting to be held next Monday evening.

If the different committees catch the spirit of enthusiasm which their chairman has, they will certainly accomplish much in making July Fourth one long to be remembered in Plainfield.

School Suffrage Women Meet.

The women representing the School Suffrage Amendment were in Trenton Tuesday with a petition of from three to four thousand names, which it is said, could be almost illimitably increased if there was time to reach all parts of the State. They met Mrs. Campfield and Dr. Graves, of Newark; Mrs. Florence Howe Hall and Mrs. Krom, of Plainfield; Mrs. Jennie D. DeWitt, of Belleville; and Dr. Mary D. Husband, of Orange.

BACK FROM A BRIDAL TOUR.

REV. MR. NEWELL AND WIFE WELCOMED TO HOPE CHAPEL.

Mr. Newell Presented With a Bicycle and Mrs. Newell With a Handsome Tea Set.

Never before in its history was Hope chapel more beautiful than on Friday evening. The occasion was the reception given to Rev. G. Kennedy Newell and his wife by the members of the congregation. On entering the edifice the sight was gorgeous. Along the walls hung the Stars and Stripes, mingled in with flowers here and there, while the chandeliers, with their gay colors, looked very pretty. At the extreme end of the chapel was an arch, tastefully decorated with varied flowers and potted plants, in the centre of which was the following inscription: "Welcome to the Hearts and Homes of Hope Chapel People." Although no programme had been prepared, still those who were called upon to say a few words, sing a song or give a recitation, did so in a willing and obliging manner.

The programme was as follows: Piano solo, Mrs. S. R. Struthers; duet, Messrs. F. Wharton, T. Cummerford; violin solo, James H. Gray; recitation, Geo. Lees; piano solo, Mrs. Fred Canfield. Then short addresses were made by Rev. W. R. Richards, Rev. J. O. McKelvey, H. C. Squires, and Rev. Mr. Erdman. The presentation speech was read by Dr. Richards, and was in part as follows:

The congregation of Hope chapel take this opportunity of briefly reviewing the history of its people. [illegible]ive years ago we had a large Sunday-[illegible]ool and weekly prayer meeting. [illegible]out that time Rev. G. K. Newell [illegible] graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, and immediately after the church session of the Crescent Avenue church called him to the pastorate of Hope chapel—at that time without a single member on its church [illegible]. But it had a name, Hope chapel, a[illegible] our pastor must have had a large share of hope in what God had in store for him here, when he accepted that call. On December 14th, 1890, the first communion service was held in Hope chapel, when in addition to those who had transferred from the Crescent Avenue church, 45 new members joined. Since then the membership has grown steadily. Today the membership numbers 240. Two hundred of whom are active, available members, and also a large number who join regularly with us in worshiping God in this chapel. And we respectively beg to acknowledge that a large share of our prosperity as a congregation, is the direct result of the labors of our pastor.

Mr. Newell, it is almost superfluous to add that during your sojourn with us you have made a host of friends not only in Hope chapel, but in Plainfield at large. It could not be otherwise, as you have been with us in our sorrows and our joys, in our prosperity and adversity, and during the hard times just passed the details of your labors among us will never be known. And considering the amount of territory covered by the membership, we, the congregation of Hope chapel, respectfully beg to present you with this bicycle as a means to better enable you to carry out the good work amongst us.

Mrs. Newell, in the words of our motto "We welcome you to the hearts and homes of Hope Chapel people," trusting that the new sphere of life you have just entered upon may be one of unclouded happiness. As a token of our love and respect, we ask you to accept this tea set as a present at our hands.

After the reading of the speech the pastor made a few appropriate remarks.

The following committee had charge of the reception: D. McInnes, chairman, R. Gow, secretary, P. Rosebery, F. Pearse, Mrs. McInnes, Neal Head, A. Jackson, Mrs. Steward, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Bushby, and Mrs. Hanson.

Look Lifelike.

Two handsome cases are on exhibition at M. C. Dobbins' cigar store. One contains a small calf which was one of six at a birth. Its lifelike appearance is occasion of much note. The other one contains a rare collection of birds, with an exceedingly pretty wooded scene in the background. Both are the work of the late Charles K. Howlett, the celebrated taxidermist, who lived and was well known in Plainfield.

To Sell the Rockaway Valley Road.

The Farmers' Loan and Trust Company has foreclosed a mortgage against the Rockaway Valley Railroad Company, and United States Marshal Linsley Howe has served notice that he will sell at public auction July 15th the property and franchises of the company. The railroad runs through sections of Morris, Somerset and Hunterdon counties.

THE MODERN IDEA GIRL.

MISS BOWEN READS AN ESSAY ON WOMAN'S WORK.

Closing Exercises of Misses Scribner's and Newton's School—An Entertaining Programme Rendered.

The commencement exercises of Miss Scribner's and Miss Newton's school were held in the school building on LaGrande avenue Thursday afternoon. The programme opened with calisthenic exercises with clubs and wands, followed by a pleasing piano solo, "By the Brookside," by Miss Agnes Langhorne.

Miss Josephine Fitz Randolph read a very ingenious and original little essay, which rather partook of the character of a romance, on "The Man in the Moon."

Miss Ada D. Bartling followed with a recitation, "A Maying," a delicate bit of romance, which she rendered with sympathy, as did Miss Katharine Reinhart her humorous selection, "The Broomstick Train, or the Return of the Witches."

Essays by the graduates, Miss Marion Plummer Bowen and Miss Annie Kip Miller, were naturally the feature of the occasion. Miss Miller's subject was historical, "The Monastery the Symbol of Culture; the Castle the Symbol of Power." She drew a vivid picture of a mediaeval castle and of the contrast between the turmoil and ferocity of a feudal baron's life and the quiet of the cloister, where literature was nurtured and books preserved from the ravages of a turbulent age.

Miss Bowen discussed some of the problems of today under the title of "Shall Woman Go Out to Earn Her Bread or Shall She Stay at Home and Make It?" A woman's "vocation" in the old-time religious sense of the term, its modern usage, the college settlements; the important standing of the washing woman, whether in business or professional life, the compatibility of womanliness and independence, the reliability of women in business and the services rendered by working women's clubs, were some of the points touched upon.

The essayist duly honored the domestic side of woman's nature, expressing the opinion that woman should be able to make her bread as well as to earn it, and concluded that a girl's education should be broad in the truest sense, imbuing high intellectual culture and practical matters as well.

Between the essays a little music in the form of a violin solo was well rendered by Miss Blossom Fitz Randolph. The presentation of diplomas, by Miss Newton, followed.

Calisthenic exercises with dumbbells closed the first part of the programme, which concluded with a French play "La Latterie de Frankfort," with the following cast:

Felicite Hoffen, aubergiste	Harriet Goddard
Rosette, cousine de Felicite	Margaret Goddard
Perine, vielle servante	Sara Richards
La Marquise d'Oberstadt	Mary Anderson Reinhart
Amanda, femme de chambre de la Marquise	Bertha Zerega

The parts of the ambitious mistress of the inn and the somewhat overbearing Marquise were very well sustained, as were the less important, but amusing roles of Rosette, Perine and Amanda.

The young ladies who graduated expect to continue their studies during the next year in preparation for college.

NEEDED NO URGING.

Participants Willingly Respond at the Voluntary Sociable.

The parlors of the Congregational church presented a very pleasing appearance last evening, at the sociable given by the Ladies Aid Society.

The decorations consisted chiefly of roses, artistically arranged. An enjoyable programme was given, but instead of having the numbers announced, those who had been asked to assist in the entertainment came forward one after another, apparently quite voluntarily, and in a pleasant and informal way added their part to the evenings enjoyment.

The first number was a piano duet by Mrs. B. T. Barnes and Mrs. M. E. Dwight, Overture, "Egmont," by Mozart, which was very tastefully played, and much enjoyed. Little Miss Amiee Emmons came next, with a pleasing recitation, "Little Gustava." Miss Julia M. Bellnap played with much expression Thomi's plaintive "Simple Aveu," after which Miss Fannie Demorest gave a recitation, "Thora," with much spirit.

Miss Katherine Dwight followed with another recitation, entitled "Mary Ann," which greatly pleased the audience, and the programme was completed by another piano duet by Mrs. Barnes and Mrs. Dwight, a "Nocturne" from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream.

At the close of the entertainment ice-cream and cake were served by a bevy of white-robed young girls, while a busy hum of voices proved that the term "sociable" was no misnomer.

GAINED BY HARD EFFORT.

Women Advocates Worked Hard and Were Successful.

Plainfield has reason to congratulate herself over the passage by the Legislature of the amendment to the Constitution, restoring school suffrage to the women of the State, as this desirable result was largely brought about by the exertions of her citizens. The amendment must be submitted to the Legislature next to be chosen, and ratified by the people of the State, before it becomes a law, but there is every reason to hope that this desirable result will be accomplished.

The ladies of the committee returned from their last trip to Trenton on Thursday, much gratified with the result of their efforts. There was almost no opposition to the bill in itself, but the great difficulty lay in the fact that the Legislature had voted to undertake no new business at this special session. The ladies of the committee arranged matters so that some of their members were present each day of the present session—six days in all. They obtained three hearings from committees, besides many invertiews with individual legislators.

Mrs. Florence Howe Hall, of this city, and Dr. Mary D. Hussy, of East Orange, were present when the bill finally passed the Assembly, thirty-six ayes being recorded for it, and only one nay. Senator Voorhees, of Union county, Rogers, of Camden, Shiren, of Mercer, and Assemblymen Drake, of Jersey City, Codding, of Westfield, Robertson, of Paterson, Skinner, of Belleville, lent valuable aid in passing the measure.

Among those who signed the petition in this city were: Mayor Gilbert, ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, A. D. Shepard, Roswell G. Hoar, Craig A. Marsh, E. W. Perkins, D. W. Pond, Isaac L. Miller, Mrs. Isaac L. Miller, Miss Kenyon, Miss Adeline Newton, Miss Julia Scribner, Dean Rodman, Dr. A. H. Lewis, Rev. Hobart Clark, Prof. H. M. Maxson, (superintendent of schools), Prof. Travell, Miss Harriet E. Delano, Miss S. Lena Bass, Miss A. M. Whitney, Miss Carrie B. Runyon, Miss Lena Tomlinson, Miss Caroline A. Barber, Miss Kate H. Marsh, Miss Julia A. Barber, Miss Ellen E. Niles, Miss Maria H. Eaton, Mrs. Charles Ryder, J. B. Bonnell, John L. Ludlum, Rev. Lee Ashley Grace, Mrs. Ruth Penfield, David Prescott Hall, Aaron M. Powell and many others.

Prof. Poland, State superintendent of schools, believes freely in the measure.

YOUNG AND OLD MINGLE.

Pleasant Sociable of Trinity Christian Endeavorers.

The social committee of the Christian Endeavor society of Trinity Reformed church arranged a pleasant social which was enjoyed last Friday in the Sunday-school room of the church. The Junior society of the church and the society from the German Reformed church were invited, but on account of it being the regular prayer meeting night for the latter, they were unable to be present.

The programme opened with a vocal solo by Wm. Holmes, which was an enjoyable feature. This was followed with a violin and piano duet by Miss Sadie Hand and Miss Mary Berg, that received hearty applause. A soprano solo by Miss Swain was appreciated, as was also another violin and piano duet. Mr. Holmes was prevailed upon to sing again. For the Junior society, Dora Wilson rendered a vocal solo, and Miss Isabella Edwards a piano solo.

Those present then joined in sociability, and the committee served all with excellent refreshments.

The little folks enjoyed themselves immensely and the older ones were pleased to have them present.

SAYS HE IS AN IMPOSTOR.

George Wilson Accused By the Newark Associated Charities.

A man answering the description of George Wilson, a blind man, who was steward of the Home for the Destitute Blind, which was opened on Washington avenue, in Elizabeth, in 1889, has been soliciting for a "Home" at Lyons Farms, and the superintendent of the Newark Bureau of Associated Charities says that he is an impostor. No such institution now exists in the State. The home which was started in 1889, did not last long. Two or three inmates, including Wilson and his wife, comprised the entire number of beneficiaries. At no time were there more than five who sought the benefit of the home.

To Shoot the Dogs.

The mayor of South Amboy has issued a proclamation enforcing the ordinance concerning dogs running at large. Owners are warned that all unlicensed dogs running about the streets without a muzzle will be shot after ten days' notice. The marshal shall be compelled to enforce the law.

YOUNG BOYS WHO ARE APT.

What Mr. Dalziel's Teaching Does For His Students.

Perseverance is the true road to success, and an apt illustration of this is shown in John Dalziel's Manual Training school which held its commencement exercises Thursday afternoon. Parents and friends of the pupils filled the rooms on East Front street to overflowing. The programme consisted of an introductory talk by Mr. Dalziel, the principal, and the reading of the following original essays by their writers:

Paul C. Haynes, Funguous Disease of Plants; James Arnold, Drawing; G. D. Kyte, Manual Training; E. J. Smalley, Wild Flowers; D. S. Pond, Geography; W. F. Opdyke, Birds; H. R. Woltmann, A Glance at Geology; John G. Dalziel, Forest Trees.

Col. John Deitrich made an address to the students, recommending them to cultivate honesty and integrity as the only way to true manliness.

D. W. Pond then rose in his seat and said that although he had looked at the school with a most critical eye, all his objections had been done away with and he had nothing left except the most unqualified praise.

After the programme was over the visitors were invited to look over the work executed by the pupils, which was on exhibition. The carpenter work on one side of the room was very good. Perfect little models of a door, a window and two flights of stairs were especially praiseworthy.

In a room adjoining the lathe work was on exhibition, and a number of pretty designs were shown. In another room, work in clay modeling was exhibited, the head of a negro calling forth praise.

To Destroy the Beetles.

John R. Smith, professor of entomology at Rutgers college, and entomological expert of the State Board of Agriculture, located at Rutgers college, was in consultation on Tuesday at the Board of Works rooms, Newark, with Commissioner Joralemon.

The idea of the consultation was to devise a plan for saving the elm trees of Newark from the ravages of the elm leaf beetle, which has already begun its destructive work. Prof. Smith's plan consists in spraying the trees with a solution of arsenate of lead, made up of four ounces of arsenate of soda and eleven ounces of acetate of lead to 100 gallons of water, the whole forming an arsenate of lead which is said to destroy the insects.

The prescribed quantity, 100 gallons, Professor Smith said would be sufficient to spray four or five of the largest trees, and that it could be made at a cost of about twenty cents. The apparatus for spraying consists of a platform wagon, a number of barrels so arranged as to permit the use of a force pump with double nozzle discharge. The whole outfit can be provided for about $100, Mr. Smith said, and required three men to work it.

Hamilton Turner, the transportation manager for the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union, has issued an itinerary of the New Jersey delegation to the Boston Convention. It is a neat pamphlet of twelve pages, and sets forth all the information needful. The side trips are outlined. The expenses of the trip to the convention is estimated at $24.50; this estimate is for the "Hotel Bartol." Delegates should send their applications to Mr. Turner as soon as possible. He puts in a plea for all to go with the State excursion. Mr. Turner reports that he has received 300 applications so far, and that they are coming in at the rate of about ten a day. The prospects are that there will be more than 500 from New Jersey. One of the features of the trip on the "City of Boston" will be the programme being prepared by President French. A beautiful map of Boston has been prepared by the committee of arrangements for the use of delegates. This will prove of great help to those who are not acquainted in the Hub City, in making their way to it. Mr. Turner will furnish these maps to delegates. The State headquarters of the New Jersey delegation have been assigned in the Mechanics hall, in a most desirable position. The Boston convention programme contains the names of the following Jerseymen: Rev. Isaac W. Gowen, New Durham, will lead the denominational rally of the Reformed Church in America; Rev. Francis L. Patton, D. D., president of Princeton College, will give an address upon "The Attractions of the Ministry to Educated Young Men;" and on Saturday, Bishop Alexander Walters, D. D., of Jersey City, will give an address upon "The Responsibility of the Afro-American Race in America."

A Good Suggestion.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—John Davies of this city, took a severe cold and suffered pain through the back and kidneys. His physician pronounced his case gravel, and failed to help him. Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was recommended, and after taking two bottles he considered himself cured. It has never failed in this or urinary troubles.

JERSEY JUSTICE.

Polanski Gets Two Years for Licking His Wife.

The case of Polanski, the Hungarian who was arrested last Sunday for cruelly beating his wife, and also for assault on Policeman Dennis Carney, came up at Elizabeth today before Judge McCormick. Prosecutor Fred Marsh conducted the case and with the evidence of the witnesses produced by Chief Grant secured a penalty of two years at hard labor in State Prison for the foreigner, who neither had money or friends.

Hard Work to Find the Fire.

Chief Doane received a telephone message from W. P. Smith's residence at Netherwood at 12:30 today noon, informing him that there was a fire at Mrs. W. S. Darling's house on Belvidere avenue. The chief responded with the apparatus. Before he reached there box 27 was pulled, calling out the rest of the department. It was learned that the chimney was supposed to be on fire, but there was some difficulty in finding it, consequently there was no damage.

Out Today.

Harper's Bazar, published on June 15th, is distinguished by the variety and beauty of its summer toilettes, and men will find in its columns an article especially adapted to their needs, giving information about negligee costumes, and indicating how one may be perfectly comfortable and still shock no conventionality during the heated terms which we may expect. A story by Edith V. B. Matthews, entitled "Little Miss Busybody," is very bright, and has an original situation.

Young Firemen.

The East End Hook and Ladder Company, of Somerville, composed of boys between the ages of fourteen and sixteen, have applied for admission to the Fourth of July parade. They have a truck, drawn by horses, which they made themselves. It also carries an extension ladder.

Sent for Plainfield Experts.

The Bound Brook officials yesterday requested Andrew Gavett, supervising engineer of the sewers, to investigate the recently completed system in that town as to whether the work had been properly executed. H. C. VanEmburgh, who is his assistant, is making the investigation in Bound Brook today.

An Editor's Son Drowned.

Wescott Carpenter, the nineteen year old son of William Carpenter, editor of the Clinton Democrat, was drowned in a pond near his home this morning. He was fishing from a rock and accidentally slipped in. Before he could be rescued he was drowned.

For Marshals.

The following have been appointed marshals for the Fourth of July parade: Chief—Captain William Hand; first assistant—R. K. Case; second assistant—B. S. Braider.

A CAT THAT FOOLED THEM.

Bryan G. Hughes, who entered the "brindled Dublin tom cat Nicodemus" in the recent New York cat show, with a big pedigree attached to him, showing that he was descended from a cat the mummy of which was found in an Egyptian tomb, and putting the price of $1,000 on him, has confessed that the cat for which he has had offers of $2,000 is a fraud.

A few days before the cat show Mr. Hughes was sitting in a bootblack's chair on the Bowery, when a colored boy sauntered up and said:

"Say, boss, do you want to buy a cat?"

Mr. Hughes remembered that mice had been eating up his paper boxes, and he gave the boy 10 cents to take the cat down to his factory and show the animal where the mice could be found.

But the cat was too silly to be of any use as a mouser.

"I guess he must be an ornamental cat," said Mr. Hughes to his brother. "At any rate, he isn't useful. Perhaps he's meant to be looked at. Let's enter him at the Cat Show."

And so they paid the $1 entrance fee and made up a long pedigree for him, put some flowers on the cage and tagged him as for sale at $1,000.

"The names in the pedigree sounded fine," said Mr. Hughes. "We made it up as we went along. All the experts crowded round the cage and admired him. They put their heads on one side and said, knowingly: 'Yes, I see his granddam was Coleslaw, out of Cabbage, and you can't beat that blood, my boy.' Of course Coleslaw and Cabbage were names we invented. Then they came around and wanted to buy the cat, and he was awarded a third prize.

"Since the show closed I have been bothered to death with offers for him. I have had checks for $1,000 and $1,500 thrust in my face. I have refused them all, because I am not in the bunco business and don't propose to cheat any one. At the same time I was a little modest about confessing that I had fooled every one, for I don't want to be made unnecessarily unpopular.

"All I want is permission to live a quiet life in my own simple way. I want the cat experts, the cat mongers and the cat fanciers to leave me alone. I'm an honest man, and they can't have my ten-cent cat for $2,000. That is final. If any more people come around bothering me with their old money I shall not be responsible for the consequences.

"This is a full and complete 'own up,' and it is final. I want it to be believed. Any one who questions my veracity must take the consequences.

"It seems to me, though, from the offers I've had, that there must be a cat famine in New York and a chance for some one to go into the cat business."

FAREWELL TO FURBELOWS.

The Latest Lamp Shades Are Models of Simplicity and Safety.

The over elaborate lamp shade has had its day. Fashion now decrees a shade simple to severity, whose contracted dimensions are in quaint contrast to the widespread flounces and furbelows of its predecessors. The new shades are of paper or silk plainly drawn over a smooth surface, and are hand painted. They are finished at the top and bottom with a prim quilling of narrow satin ribbon, and look precise and Quakerfield to a degree, after all the laces, chiffons and flower wreaths which have clustered about lamps for the last few seasons.

Ambassador Bayard's Tip.

A dozen newspaper men went down to quarantine to meet Ambassador Bayard. The newspaper men decided not to frighten him by a combined onslaught, and appointed one of their number to do the interviewing. The delegate, it happened, bears the time honored name of Smith. Calling one of the junior assistant stewards, Mr. Smith handed him his card, with the request to take it to Mr. Bayard, at the same time dropping a dime and a nickel as a tip into the boy's outstretched hand.

The lad hurried away, while the reporters awaited the issue with complacency. In a few minutes he returned and extended the card and the money with these words:

"Mr. Bayard sends his compliments to Mr. Smith, and desires to state that while he has the honor of the acquaintance of many Mr. Smiths, he does not remember any Mr. Smith who owes him 15 cents."

"W—what!" demanded the newsgatherers in a body. "What in the name of Horace Greeley have you done?"

"Why, I gave Mr. Bayard the card and the 15 cents as you told me to do, and told him that you sent them. That's all," replied the boy calmly.

Not in a Position to Offer Inducements.

Soon after the outbreak of the Cuban insurrection an American newspaper determined, as did some others, to send a special correspondent to the seat of war. The journal in question had been getting some live reports from its regular correspondent at a point in Florida, and the special correspondent was ordered to stop at this point and take the Floridian to Cuba with him. In a day or two the telegraph editor received the following message from the special:

"Our correspondent here seems very much disinclined to go to Cuba with me."

The editor was determined not to have his plans balked, and sent this:

"Our Florida correspondent must obey orders and go to Cuba with you. Offer any reasonable inducements."

Not long afterward the following reply, which disturbed the equilibrium of the office for a week, was received:

"Our correspondent here refuses point blank to go to Cuba with me except upon one condition, and that is, that I marry her. I have one wife already and I am afraid the war will be over before I can get a divorce. Answer quick."

The financial outlook in Clapp & Company's weekly market letter is summed up as follows:

> The motto on the silver dollar is being emphasized by the courageous men of field, factory and finance. Political and commercial pessimists offer their stock of woes and difficulties to a people too busy making money to hear or heed. The ripening harvest begins to call for the few who still stand idle in the market place.

The Prohibitionists yesterday nominated Henry W. Wilbur, of Vineland, for Governor. There is but little question but what the fire department of the borough needs an assistant chief, since it has been decided to establish a company at Bull Frog city, the work devolving upon Chief Fairchild will be at times too much. Unfortunately for the generosity of The Daily Press the samples of the raw sewage and its effluent from the South Framingham beds, which were the gift of Councilman Westphal, were poured into the gutter the other day. Otherwise we should have certainly invited Editor Day to bring down his "pretty decorated cup and saucer that holds a good big cupful," and imbibe some of the before and after, with the hope that such a proceeding would permit him to inculcate some practical experience into the Dunellenites.

The seventh statistical report of the Insterstate Commerce Commission for the year ending June 30, 1894, has just been submitted. The total railway mileage in the United States on June 30, 1894, was 178,708, an increase during the year of 2,247 miles. The increase during the previous year was 4,897. The percentage of increase during 1894 was less than for any preceding year for which reports have been made to the commission. The number of roads abandoned was sixteen. The total mileage of all tracks was 233,533 miles.

Reports from the seacoast give promise of a very profitable season. From Ocean Grove we learn that more houses had been rented up to the 18th of June, and at better prices, than last year at the same period, and that the demand has been for the better class of houses. From Long Branch it is reported that the arrivals of cottage residents during last week, at that place and in the vicinity, far outnumbered any previous year for the first week in June. The greater part of the city people who own cottages along the ocean front are said to be occupying them two weeks earlier than usual.—True American.

The nomination of ex-Governor Ludlow to the Supreme Court was a masterpiece of policy on the part of Governor Werts. Notwithstanding his nomination of a Republican in the person of Mr. Gummere, the Senators stood ready to defeat the confirmation of a Democrat in the place of Mr. Reed, and would have defeated any other Democrat than Governor Ludlow. His fitness for the position; his great record as Governor in an era most trying and under conditions most perplexing; and the high and honorable stand which he had taken in State matters would have made his rejection an insult to the best people of the State.—True American.

> The Democrats in the Legislature form only a small minority, but they have outwitted the Republicans in policy and tactics on several occasions. Some people are slow to learn the tricks of the politicians. It is hard to beat an unscrupulous politician. Watch and see if Kelsey and others don't go scot free.—New Brunswick Home News.

In the same column with the above editorial the editor of The Home News says that he has been in the newspaper business twenty-five years. How any sane man can have been observing the ways of politicians for a quarter of a century, and then speak of the present Republican Legislative manipulators as being slow at learning the tricks of politicians, is a mystery. The Daily Press felt sorry for Mr. Boyd when Collector Price slapped his mouth, but such a break as this is really worthy of more sympathy than the assault could possibly create.

> New Brunswick with 20,000 population has eighty-one applicants for liquor licenses, the most of which will be granted. Plainfield and North Plainfield, with an equal number of people, have eighteen licensed places. There is some little difference.—Plainfield Daily Press.

Yes, there is a big difference. And this may account for the fact that, in New Brunswick, they assault editors for telling the truth; that they deadlock their City Council after the people declared against partisan politics of the old, corrupt school; that about the hardest place in all New Jersey to work reform is this same city of New Brunswick. But the facts are that the old regime is about ended, and though its death throes are violent and its struggles painful to witness, the final collapse is near at hand, and with this collapse there may come a revision of the number of licenses, say on the Plainfield basis.—Elizabeth Daily Journal.

The one hundred and nineteenth Legislature adjourned without day at 3:30 yesterday afternoon, having passed all the bills recommended by the select committee, many of them the second time despite the objections of the Governor, with the exception of the bill requiring that all applications for pardons shall be filed with the Clerk of the Court of Pardons for thirty days previous to action upon them. This bill was vetoed by the Governor, and the Republican Senators decided not to take further action. The closing scenes in the Senate took on a dramatic phase when Senator Voorhees was privileged to read a statement from the Comptroller showing what a saving had been made in the expenses of the State by the passage of the new appropriation bill. There had been so many different estimates made and so many questions asked that the statement was listened to with much interest.

The bill, as it now goes to the Governor, foots up $2,295,567, which includes all the ordinary and extraordinary expenses. In 1894 the expenditures, including ordinary, extraordinary and special appropriations, were $2,189,184.75. A dozen different estimates have been made of the effect of the bill upon the States finances.

The New Jersey Editorial Association has arranged to spend next week at Spring Lake. If anyone deserves a rest, it is the editors.

The gold reserve in the Treasury is now within $300,000 of the hundred million mark, and bond syndicate have yet to pay in $7,000,000.

Desire for a borough government seems to be contagious just at present among Union county people. Locust Grove is the latest community to agitate the subject.

Russell Sage evidently rather pay fees to lawyers than to give the man who saved him from going heavenward in a thousand pieces a mere bagatelle of his fortune.

The dickering which is going on between Zimmerman and Johnson, the bicyclists, for a match, resemble pugilistic preliminaries more than true sportsmanlike negotiations.

> Any man who will take the trouble to drive to Summit and inspect the sewage beds will not be long deciding whether they will be an ornament or a nuisance.—Dunellen Call.

No one claims that they will be an ornament, but gentlemen who have thoroughly and extensively studied the question state that they are not a nuisance. That is sufficient.

The pen is no longer mightier than the sword, so it seems in the opinion of the late lawyer Legislature. They took good care not to lower the appropriations of the Judiciary, but rather to increase the same, though the appropriations for the newspaper[illegible] who are the only medium of in[illegible] tion for the masses, was lopp[illegible]

The Society for the Improvement of Speech should try to formulate some plan by which a man can think of a good big chunk of effective repartee at the moment when he stands in most need of it. As it is now, we think of smart things we might have said several hours after the other fellow has reached his home and gone to bed.—Evening World.

The adage, "Turn about is fair play," is somewhat aged, but nevertheless a true one. Recognizing the aptness of this axiom and also the fact that newspaper men are continually proclaiming the good qualities of other men, The New York World has commenced a series of portraits and biographies of New Jersey editors, one of which will be published each day.

Members of the Chicago Board of Education do not object to teachers riding to and from school on bicycles. One of them, A. S. Trude, thinks "it would be downright tyranny, just at the time when every other woman is riding a wheel, or trying to, for a few men to get together and say the teachers shall not ride to or from school. My observation is that women who have wheels at their heels are not troubled with them in their heads."

The Board of Education of Plainfield has made an important change in the system of penmanship to be taught in the future. Instead of the old Spencerian, the vertical system will be adopted. It is claimed that the new way is more practical, legible and hygienic, because the pupil instead of sitting sidewise at the desk as in the old way, sits squarely in front and develops both sides of the body alike. The established or Spencerian hand used by the older scholars will not be changed.—Exchange.

C. B. Trimmer and John F. Christ, of Roselle, who were arrested in this city Sunday for riding bicycles on the sidewalk, threaten to appeal from the decision of the city court that imposed a fine upon them. The only appeal they can make is to the Supreme Court by certiorari, and when they learn this fact their inclination for appeals will probably cease. The city court decisions are peculiarly protected and it costs considerable money to upset them—considerable more than the Rosellites will care to expend.

After all, Senator Voorhees and Counsel Corbin were probably wiser than they thought when they reported that the judiciary expenses could not be curtailed in this State. For there is no doubt that if the laws passed by the Legislature are not to be published for the enlightenment of the people, that litigation will be greatly increased. Farmers living a dozen miles from the county seat are not going to drive that distance and spend a half day reading the copy on file. Such a recommendation and such a system of promulgating the laws means money in the pockets of the lawyers, and danger to the liberty of those who may violate law in ignorance.—Somerville Unionist-Gazette.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM.

FOR PLAINFIELD WILL HAVE A GREAT CELEBRATION.

The General Committee Meet Again and Hear Favorable Reports—Organizations Who Will Parade.

Another meeting of the general committee for the Fourth of July celebration was held last Monday in Red Men's hall.

The attendance was excellent, though not quite as large as on former occasions, but the enthusiasm was evident on all sides. Chairman Nash called for the reports of the subcommittees, the first being the executive. Charles Ulrich, chairman, gave an outline of what had been done, which showed conclusively that this most important committee are doing all they can to make the event a success. They asked for hearty co-operation from all.

The parade committee reported through Amos Andrews, chairman, that details of their work had been looked after and that a line of march had been arranged, but were not quite ready to make it known. Mayor Gilbert stated that the committee on collections were busy and that, in all, about $700 had been raised.

The printing committee had no report to make as yet, for they have had nothing to do especially thus far.

T. J. Carey, for the finance committee, said that he was unable to make a report at that time.

Mr. Nash requested all lodges that were going to parade to report to the parade committee.

Under the head of new business Mr. Ulrich moved that all societies that were not going to parade be asked [illegible] contribute. It was carried.

Amos Andrews made a motion [illegible] all church bells be rung at midnight of the Fourth, sunrise, noon and sunset.

Mr. Ulrich objected very much and thought all noise ought to be made in the day time. Mr. Bauersachs [illegible] objected, because he thought everyone would need the rest. The motion was carried, however.

A motion by H. G. Adams that a militia company be invited to parade was lost, and Capt. George Edwards said that he would have eighty cadets present that would do as good as any National Guard company.

Capt. Hand threw out a few suggestions in regard to all being prompt in getting into line, and when so to keep the line well closed up.

The subject of having souvenir badges was discussed, but the committee did not think it advisable to buy them unless they could see their way clear to pay for them. The matter was finally referred to the committee on printing.

An adjournment was then made for one week and the various committees met to transact business pertaining to their departments.

The following organizations have reported that they would parade: Crescent Wheelmen, Unity, Perseverance and Crescent Divisions Knights of Pythias, Queen City and Plainfield Lodge, I. O. O. F., Sons of Veterans, Franklin and Somerset Councils, J. O. U. A. M., Paugh-Caugh-Naugh-Sinque and Miantonomoh Tribes, I. O. R. M., C. Y. M. L., T. A. B., C. B. L., [illegible] O. H., Stone Square Lodge, F. and A. M., Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, and G. A. R. Posts.

Reminiscences of Stevenson.

Andrew Lang wrote some brief reminiscences of Stevenson shortly after the latter's death. He apologized for the poverty of his material, and said that the only men qualified for this task were Sidney Colvin and Edmund Gosse. Mr. Gosse has now written his "Personal Memories of Stevenson," and they will appear in the July number of the Century. He records, among other things, that Stevenson was long proposing to write a life of the Duke of Wellington, and relates "a splendid dream of romance"—a grotesque fancy—which Stevenson had of an organized system of hotel piracy on Sundays in the heart of London, which he unfolded with a most convincing air. Mr. Gosse calls him not only "the most exquisite English writer of his generation," but "the most unselfish and most lovable of human beings."

ADDRESS TO THE PATRIOTS,

NOT OF '76 BUT OF '95, AND RIGHT IN PLAINFIELD.

Fourth of July Celebration Executive Committee Outline Their Plan of Making the Natal Day a Big Success.

The Executive Committee appointed by the chairman of the General Organization to look after the affairs of the celebration on the Fourth of July has begun its work. It enters upon these labors fully appreciating the importance of all that devolves upon close attention to the many details. The chairman wishes to call the attention of the General Organization, and the citizens of Plainfield and North Plainfield, to the objects and results to be obtained by a fitting and successful exhibition on that day. The proposal to celebrate in a becoming manner the day that commemorates the Declaration of Independence awakens patriotic feelings in the breasts of all lovers of liberty, and recalls the sacrifices made by our forefathers. To perpetuate the name of Washington and to guard more closely the pr[illegible]pts laid down by the first Continental Congress is the first motive that urges us to this action. To the business men and residents of the city we wish to direct a few words and add a few suggestions.

Plainfield's population is far above the average of any other city in the State, in intelligence, wealth, and social position. Its location is the pride of her citizens. Her business buildings and residences surpass many towns of greater size. Her stores are models of commercial progress. Goods can be purchased here as cheaply as they can be bought in New York or other cities. Her building sites are the finest within a radius of 100 miles of New York, and offer every advantage to purchasers; and her water has no superior, and is seldom equalled.

Facilities for transportation are unsurpassed. Many public improvements are already made, and many others are contemplated. Society here is of the best. Schools and other institutions are numerous, and have reached a high degree of excellence. Churches of all denominations boast of a large attendance and flourishing congregations, and their pulpits are filled with men of exceptional ability. While Plainfield is chiefly a residential city, there are many who are attracted here who must be provided with employment. The city already has several large manufacturing plants which engage operatives of a high class, who are earnest in their efforts to secure homes for themselves and families.

With these conditions so plainly evident, it must appear to all who are interested in the growth and importance of the place that with concerted effort much can be done to bring the advantages so exclusively our own before a large number of people who will visit our city on the day of our celebration.

Therefore we recommend that every business be fully represented in the display which is to be made. That the several industries put forth an effort to exhibit their products by floats, wagons and other devices, and the various organizations will fully demonstrate the patriotic sentiments that they have already expressed, and make a creditable showing. And it is important that every citizen should call attention to friends living out of town and invite them to be present on that day and observe the varied interests of our city.

All our citizens should appropriately decorate their homes and business places. All are requested to contribute as liberally as their means will allow This committee will see to it that sufficient police protection will be given, and will urge the city authorities to have all the streets which will be traversed by the parade, in good condition.

The features of the day as thus far outlined will be:

In the morning, parade of organizations; business representations; military companies; trade displays, etc.

In the afternoon, public outdoor meeting; orations and other patriotic features.

In the evening, fireworks and band concerts.

We urge every committee to use the closing days and make the most of ther time to insure a pleasant day for all. (Signed)

SUMMER DANCES.

First of a Series Held in the Casino Last Night.

An ideal evening made the first of a series of informal subcription dances, which are to be held this summer in the Casino, a perfect success. The first of the series was held Monday, the second will be held on July 1st, and the third sometime during September. Rogers and Conde furnished the music. The room was well filled, and all expressed themselves as greatly delighted with the success of the evening. The committee in charge consisted of Howard W. Beebe, Fred W. Walz, and Laurens VanBuren.

Among those present during the evening were: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Reinhart, Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. MR. ISHAM FILES A BIG DEED.

His Holdings in Union County Are Transferred.

Henry H. Isham, the wealthy Brooklyn man who recently failed to get a judicial separation from his wife, had a deed recorded yesterday in the County Clerk's office at Elizabeth. It conveys all his land holdings in Elizabeth, with what he held in other parts of Union county, to Judge P. R. Gilhooly, of Elizabeth, for the consideration of $50,000.

The document is signed by Henry H. Isham and by his estranged wife, Juliet Calhoun Isham, a grandniece of John C. Calhoun. This record would indicate that a compromise and perhaps a reconciliation had been effected.

An attachment suit for $14,000 brought by John W. Cooper, of New York, against Mr. Isham's possessions in Elizabeth, is pending in the Union County Court. Mr. Isham was for some years president of the New Jersey State Agricultural Society, and helped to get several large industries to locate in Elizabeth.

Why Independence Day Is Celebrated.

Did you ever hear how it happened we celebrate July Fourth rather than some later day. For days the members of Congress had differed over the terms of the Declaration. As the hot summer weeks progressed, windows were opened, much to the delight of the mosquitoes and flies of a neighboring stable. The stockinged calves of Congressional legs were assailed daily by the diminutive combatants, until at last the persistency of the most stubborn member was worn out on the Fourth day of July. "Now that the struggle was over the members became hilarious in their good-nature." John Hancock dashed down his great signature in such shape "that George the Third might read it without his spectacles." "Now we must hang together, it was remarked. "Yes," said Franklin, "or we shall separately."—From "Colonial Philadelphia" in Demorest's Magazine for July.

Some Montclair People Indignant.

The writ of certiorari secured by a number of Montclair people through James M. Trimble, which has resulted in work upon the roads of the town being stopped for a year at least, has created much indignation. The work was stopped in some places after the road had been dug out, preparatory to laying stone. The writ has had the effect of restraining the Assessor from placing the $10,000 bond road appropriation in this year's tax levy, and from enjoining the treasurer from paying for any work.

MAKERS OF MERRY FUN.

DELIGHTFUL TIME IN MONROE AVENUE CHAPEL MONDAY.

Sweet Music, Fancy Drills and Ludicrous Sketches Make Up the Evening's Programme—The Participants.

It is not always the largest church that furnishes its congregation with the most enjoyable entertainments, and the Monroe Avenue chapel, although comparatively small in numbers, certainly has plenty of talent at its command and is able to arrange most delightful programmes, as was shown by last evening's entertainment in that church.

The programme opened with singing and prayer, after which Miss Grace King read a very interesting report of the Epworth League State convention to which she was a delegate. The electric lights were then turned out and the platform arranged for shadow pictures. The first "The Belle of the Kitchen" was represented by a large dinner bell on a table. "The Battle of Bunker Hill" consisted of two boys fighting, and the "Declaration of Independence" of a woman chasing a man across the platform with a broom. A series of pictures represented "A Hash House Conspiracy." The boarding house keeper persists in giving her boarders hash for breakfast, dinner and supper, while the boarders noticed that the old cat has disappeared. The awful consequences of eating the hash are shown and then the boarders unite and force the landlady to finish the cat hash to her great horror.

A piano solo was next artistically rendered by Mrs. Brown. The an[illegible]cement of a vocal solo by George [illegible]ns brought out a round of applause, and after he sang "Blige the Lady" as only he can sing it, the applause was deafening and he responded with another song.

The Harvesters, a very pretty drill arranged by Miss Charlotte Aldrich, followed. Those taking part in it were: Jessie Burt, Lulu Randolph, Emma Wright, Anna Wenzell, Alice Pugh, Helen Fulton, May Brower, Ada VanDoren, Charles Burt, Stephen Aldrich, Robert Lauremore, Will VanNess, Aaron Brower, Fred Sopher, George Whitley and Clarence VanDorn.

Rev. Mr. O'Donnell made a few remarks, after which the dialogue "The New Hat" was given. The cast was as follows: Mrs. Clipper, Miss Brower; Kitty Clipper, Miss Edith L. Burt; Aunt Hopkins, Miss Charlotte Aldrich; Katy, the maid, Miss Ada Wenzell; Mrs. Fastone, Miss Kitty Ackerman; Dora Fastone, Miss Amy Burt.

Kitty wishes a new bonnet and her mother tells her that if she has it her brother cannot have a new suit, but Kitty wants it very badly and it is ordered. Mrs. Clipper reads a letter for Katy, the maid, telling that her lover has sent her a bonnet. Aunt Hopkins appears on the scene and is wild to know whether the Jones' have mutton or lamb for dinner. A bonnet arrives which Aunt Hopkins supposes is Kitty's new one and examines it, but, seeing Kitty coming, hides it under the table. Kitty enters and is told of her new bonnet but before she can look at it Mrs. and Dora Fastone come to call. The question of bonnets is brought up and the visitors wish to see Kitty's new one. Aunt Hopkins takes the bonnet out of the box and puts it on Kitty. It is a most ridiculous one and the visitors are much amused. After they leave, Kitty discovers it is the one belonging to Katy and is broken hearted, and when Katy enters with the real bonnet Kitty sends it back and tells her mother that she does not wish a new one but will make the old one do.

Miss Brower made a very good mother, while Miss Edith L. Burt acted the part of the daughter to perfection. Miss Aldrich was splendid as the aunt, and Miss Ackerman and Miss Amy Burt was as sedate as their characters required. Miss Wenzell, also, was not lacking.

At the conclusion of the entertainment a unanimous vote of thanks was given to Miss Aldrich for her labors in training the children for the drill and her many successful parts.

Attacked By a Cow.

Mrs. Bartell Wormsey, of Union village, five miles from this city, was attacked by a vicious cow and quite seriously injurud Saturday afternoon. She was passing through a pasture lot in which the cow and a young calf were kept, when the bovine attacked and knocked her down with such force that she became insensible. Dr. Jones was summoned and administered to her injuries.

Use it in Time.

Catarrh starts in the nasal passages, affecting eyes, ears and throat, and is in fact, the great enemy of the mucous membrane. Neglected colds in the head almost invariably precede catarrh, causing an excessive flow of of mucous, and if the mucous discharge becomes interrupted the disagreeable results of catarra will follow, such as bad breath, severe pain across forehead and about the eyes, a roaring and buzzing sound in the ears and oftentimes a very offensive discharge. Ely's Cream Balm is the acknowledged cure for these troubles.

VOWS AT HYMEN'S ALTAR.

AMEY ELIZA GREEN WEDDED TO REV. FRANK ST. JOHN FITCH.

Ceremony Solemnized in Grace P. E. Church, Rev. Dr. Rodman Officiating—Reception at the House Afterward.

The interior of Grace P. E. church was a scene of beauty last Monday, when Plainfield's society people gathered to witness the marriage of Miss Amey Eliza Green, daughter of Mrs. David Comstock Green, of Park avenue, to the Rev. Frank St. John Fitch, of Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The wealth and beauty of Plainfield was very much in evidence. Around the altar and chancel was the choicest decorations of flowers, that added lustre to the brilliant event. It was the work of the members of the Y. W. C. T. U., of which society Miss Green was president for four years.

Mrs. Freeman presided at the organ and the rendition of classic music from well known composers was perfect in every detail.

At eight o'clock the bridal party appeared, and as the familiar notes of Lohengrin's wedding march were heard, they proceeded up the centre aisle. The ushers were first, then came the maid of honor, Miss Louise Green, sister of the bride, followed by the bride leaning on the arm of Dr. Fitch, brother of the groom.

The bride being a brunette her beauty was charmingly set off by a dress of heavy white corded silk, trimmed with old point and duchesse lace, and wearing a tulle veil. Forming a striking contrast was her sister acting as maid of honor, she being a decided blonde gowned in pale Nile green, which was set off by the shower bouquet of pink roses which she carried.

They were met at the altar by the groom and best man, Rev. Charles W. Haines, of Washington, Warren county, brother of the groom, and Rev. Dr. Rodman, pastor of the church, who performed the impressive Episcopal ceremony. The bride was given away by her mother, Mrs. David Comstock Green. The party retired from the church while the sweet notes of Mendelssohn's wedding march were being played, and went at once to the bride's home, where a reception was given. The home was beautifully decorated with roses and greens. The bride received under a marriage bell of daisies. The veranda was decorated with greens and flowers and was also illuminated.

Those receiving were Mrs. David Comstock Green, Mrs. Orville Stillman, Mrs. DeGraw Moore, Dr. and Mrs. Fitch. In the library assisting Miss Louise Green, were Misses Margaret Fitch, Jean Yerkes, Mabel Wilder and Florence Abbott. The lucky one of this number to receive the bride's bouquet ring was Miss Green herself.

The guests from out of town were: Mrs. Orville Stillman and son, Westerly, R. I., Misses Brown, Corning, N. Y., Dr. and Mrs. Fitch and Mrs. DeGraw Moore, Orange, Miss Margaret Fitch, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Mr. and Mrs. John Gorham, New York, Rev. R. S. Holmes, Pittsburg, George Daland and Miss Daland, Elizabeth, Miss Yerkes, Philadelphia, and Miss Zabrieska, New York.

The ushers at the church were Rev. L. Ellsworth Brokaw, East Washua, N. Y., William Haskell, New York, Rev. Robert Thompson, Lincroft, and James Murray, Plainfield.

Max Wiertz was the caterer and served a luncheon to the entire bridal party at two o'clock in the afternoon, and also served the supper at the reception in his usual faultless manner.

If you have not engaged your work I should be pleased to do it for you.

I buy only first-class Marble and Granite and do not sell unless at prices that will enable me to put up the work with credit to myself and justice to the parties purchasing.

I am under a very small expense in running my shop, myself and my son doing the larger portion of the work, and we personally attend to the setting of all work, and look upon business in this light, that Good Work and Good Material, at Fair Prices, is a standing advertise for my business, which will tend to build up trade, and I feel safe to warrant that no dealer can sell you the same work and same stock any cheaper than I can.

FUN FOR THE BLIND.

TAG AND SHINNY PLAYED WITH ALL THE ENERGY OF YOUTH.

A Specially Invented Typewriter Used in a New York Institution. Foot Ball, Leap Frog and an Occasional Rough-and Tumble Enjoyed By Blind Children.

It is a little uncanny to a man with eyes to receive attention from the blind.

To be met at the threshold by a polite, attentive little woman, with a sightless face, who hands you a chair, takes a sympathetic interest in you errand, and then sits down at the finest typewriter ever made to send your message in the mysterious raised letters of the blind to a sightless man upstairs; to have this man receive you with as much ease and courtesy as though he could see you and reap the benefit of the proverbial "first impression;" to see a couple of fresh faced little girls literally shining with cleanliness, and who have never seen the light of the sun, come bounding into the reception room at the touch of a bell; to follow these girls through long corridors past rooms where other blind girls and boys were taking music lessons, learning useful trades and plodding with marvelons patience over tasks that are tiresome even to people with sight; to receive courteous bows of recognition from men and women who know a stranger only by the touch of his foot upon the polished floors, and who have no idea of what a man or woman looks like; to see those girls march steadily ahead without groping their path like blind beggars on the street, but sauntering along with all the confidence in the world, and finding the person you wish to see particularly in a room filled with people makes one devoutedly thankful that God had given him sight.

A reporter of the New York Herald was led to this conclusion after visiting the New York Institution for the Blind.

At the time the reporter called, Mr. Babcock was in charge. Mr. Babcock is a hale and hearty old gentleman with the physique of a giant and the rosy complexion of an English school girl. After he has shaken hands with you the chief regret of your life seems to be that he cannot look in the glass and find out what a nice looking, amiable old gentleman he is.

"I am busy just at present," said Mr. Babcock, "and I must ask you to excuse me. But I'll send for one of our instructors in calisthenics, and he will give you an opportunity to observe for yourself."

He touched a bell, and almost on the moment a blind girl appeared and stood patiently awaiting instructions.

"Tell Mr. Rice that I would like to speak to him for a moment."

The girl was off in a jiffy, threading her way through corridors, up stairs, until she finally knocked at the door of a room where Mr. Rice was putting a class of girls through a course of muscular training. It appeared, upon inquiry, that blind children must be made proficient in a system of indoor training before they are permitted to indulge in outdoor games. It gives them confidence and self reliance. Educating the blind is very much like training acrobats for the circus. After the first feeling is overcome, feats that once inspired them with dread are accomplished with ease.

It was a wonderful sight to see the blind children at play on the beautiful lawn that is walled in from the street—to see them, romping around at leap frog, tag, shinny, playing horse, doing the broad jump, skipping rope, and even spinning tops with a skill that was simply astonishing.

It was difficult to believe that these little creatures could not see the sunshine or the faces of the merry companions in their games. In playing leap frog distances were judged by chips placed on the grass.

There are some children in the institution who can see a little—but a very little—and in making up games that involve a certain element of risk the instructors aim to utilize them to the best advantage in assisting others who are totally blind.

Tug of war is a game that blind boys especially enjoy. Five on a side is selected, and the struggle is watched—if such a word may be used in connection with the blind—with the keenest interest. The lads seem to know intuitively every point of the contest, and to follow each movement as closely as though they were in full possession of their sight.

In football the blind boys kick only for height and distance, following the ball by the sound it makes in its fall—and they seldom miss it. Like all other children they get into quarrels over their games, and if it comes to a fight a blind boy knows where to find his adversary and to plant a blow where it is calculated to do the most good.

Made Them All Yawn.

"Facial movements in utter strangers may often be influenced by those who are looking at them," one of three men who were going uptown in a Fourth avenue car the other night was heard to say.

"I do not believe it," rejoined one of his companions.

"You do not? Well, I think I can prove it to you," the first speaker said. "I believe I can make all of those opposite to us yawn quite easily. I will yawn once or twice and then you both yawn, and see what the effect will be." He thereupon yawned, making a slight noise to attract attention, and then his companions yawned. This they repeated and before the car had gone 200 feet every one opposite them had yawned, although prior to the first speaker's yawning no one had given any indication of being tired or sleepy.—New York Times.

Universalism is increasing notably in Maine. The State Convention of the denomination was held a few days ago and the reports for the past year showed considerable growth and prosperity.

HEAVY ARMOR WAS SMASHED.

One Shot Like These Could Sink Our Greatest Battleship.

That our new man-of-war Oregon could be sunk by a single shot has been proved by a most remarkable series of armor tests which the Navy Department recently made. And this single shot, moreover, need not be in the bow or stern of the mighty ship, where her armor is comparatively thin.

Right on the side, where her armor is heaviest, protecting the vital parts of the vessel near the water line with immense plates of Harveyized nickel steel, the impact of a single shot, it has now been shown, could crush in the side of the ship, probably sending her to the bottom. This mighty ship of 10,231 tons displacement, the largest war vessel ever constructed on this continent, a veritable colossus of the sea, which cost the Government millions of dollars and was supposed to be impregnable, is now known to be at the mercy of newly improved projectiles which can crush in her sides and rip off her armor like so much tin.

As a result of these tests important modifications will be made in the armament and construction of the new battle-ships and men-of-war. For once the armor men have got the worst of it. There has long been pending in the Navy Department a contest between the Construction Bureau and the Ordnance Bureau regarding the main batteries of the two new battle-ships.

The Construction Bureau is composed of the chiefs of the various naval bureaus, and hitherto they have favored 12-inch guns, while the Ordnance Bureau has been decidedly in favor of 13-inch guns. An inch is a small matter for two dignified bodies of men of this kind to quarrel about, but it means that in the present case the only way to settle the matter was by a practical test of armor versus guns.

And it would seem from the tests that have just taken place that the 13-inch gun has immeasurably shown its superiority to the gun that is only one inch smaller in the bore. The side armor of the Oregon could fairly well resist any 12-inch gun afloat, but an additional inch in caliber gives the victory to the gun and robs the Oregon of any claim to being able to resist the largest cannon on men-of-war.

GIANT ICEBERGS AT SEA.

They Are Made Picturesque by the Destructive Action of Ocean Currents.

Otto Nielsen, the Westernland's chief officer, as hearty an old salt as ever trod a quarter deck, declares that he never saw larger or finer bergs during the whole course of his experience than upon his last trip to New York.

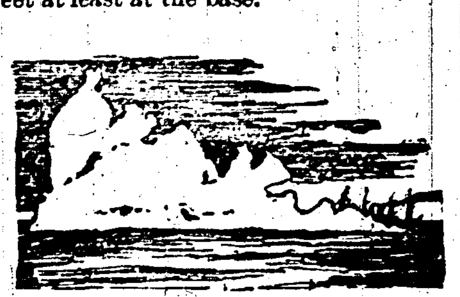
"We were approaching the ice circle off Newfoundland," he said. "Passing steamers had signalled us that lots of icebergs were drifting about, and we kept a sharp lookout. The day was foggy, and smashing into an iceberg in the dark is no joke, let me tell you.

"Finally the fog lifted, and the sun shone out bright and clear. As we were speeding along I noticed a white speck off the starboard bow in the distance. 'There she is!' I exclaimed.

"'What!' queried a timid passenger; 'do you call that little speck an iceberg?'

"'That's just what it is,' said I, 'and it's fully twenty miles away. It will be big enough when we get near enough to take it all in.'

"We approached the berg rapidly. It appeared to grow right out from the sea. What a sight it was! It had the shape of a pyramid 100 feet high and 600 feet at least at the base.



"The sun shone on it from the south, causing it to send forth dazzling rays, like some huge diamond resting in a bed of azure blue.

"Now, about icebergs in general. Few persons have any conception of their actual size. Only one-ninth part of their bulk is above water. A berg, then, showing up one hundred feet high would really be nine hundred feet were it all above the surface.

"What a sight some of those ice monsters would be could we see them just as they are when they leave their frozen cradles of the Arctic! All the refrigerators in the world could not produce such a sight.

"You see," the nautical man continued, "or rather you do not see, an iceberg as it was when it first slipped into the water. The warm currents melt the softer particles of ice away below the surface. Soon the center of gravity is upset, so to speak. It becomes top heavy. Then, with a mighty upheaval, it turns over on its side, or, perhaps, completely round. We then view the work of the currents in the fantastic shapes we see before us.

"I once witnessed one of these interesting somersaults. It was a mighty sight. The water splashed hundreds of feet in the air. There was a low, rumbling sound, as of distant thunder, and great tidal waves swept by us as the monster settled in its new position.

"We saw many other icebergs during the trip. One was 200 feet high and 800 feet in length. It was slowly careening over to one side, even as we watched it. There was a chip of the old block, its top covered with snow just as it left its native home."

JOCULARITY WAS DOMINANT.

SMITH FAMILY HAVE COME, MADE FUN, AND GONE.

Miss Petrie Made a Successful Advance Agent—Why the Courier Was Left—The Characters.

If you wanted to laugh on Friday you missed it by not attending the entertainment given by the famous Smith family in the First Presbyterian church. The family consists of a large curtain on which are painted the various characters with openings for face and hands which are filled by the living participants. The parts were taken as follows:

Pa Smith	Harry Williams
Ma Smith	Bessie Blair
Uncle John	George O. Stevens
Aunt Jemima	Katheryne Overton
Sissy Smith	Edith Lane
Sonny Smith	John Petrie
Infant Prodigy	Lottie Messersmith
Baby Smith	Charles Hazeltine

The entertainment opened with introductory remarks of a very humorous nature by Miss Florence Petrie, the advance agent of the Smith family, who also read an account supposed to have been published in last evening's Daily Press, telling of the arrival of the Smiths and the excitement of the town over their arrival. The Common Council, she said, promised to extend the trolley line to the church if they would only postpone their coming for ten years.

The attempts of many well-known people to meet the Smiths were very laughable, especially when Miss Petrie read that the reason that the Courier published no account of the great arrival was that the reporter of that paper, being in such a hurry to arrive at the station, had attempted to jump the sewer ditch on his wheel and had landed in the mud at the bottom with his heels pointing heavenward, where he remained, as everybody was too busy to pull him out.

The curtain was then drawn, and the Smith family appeared. Their selections were: Family chorus, "Our Family Name is Smith"; "Down by the Riverside," solo by Ma Smith; "Old John Brown, He had a Little Injun," Smith Family; "We Mourn All Day, We Mourn All Night," solo by Aunt Jemina; "Blige the Lady," solo by Uncle John; "The Parrot Said," solo by Sonny Smith; "The Boy Across the Way," solo by Sissy Smith; "Wake up, Gabriel, Ma Smith and the family; "Old Rags," a round by the family; "You Can't Play in my Yard," solo by Infant Prodigy; "Little Alabama Coon," solo by Uncle John.

During the intermission which followed the last number, Miss Grace E. Overton recited "The Judgment Day" in a most delightful manner. Miss Overton has talent in that direction, and her recitations are always looked forward to and enjoyed by all.

The programme was then continued as follows:

"Listen to the Mocking Bird," solo by Baby Smith, whistling accompaniment by Uncle John; "Hiding from Papa," solo by Pa Smith; "Sweet Alice," solo by Sonny Smith; medley by the Smith family; Good Night by the Smith family.

There is only one George Stevens and he was at his best. His two selections were very amusing and his way of joining in the chorus brought down the house. John Petrie made a perfect Sonny Smith and kept the audience in a continual roar.

The Baby, Charles Hazeltine, was also up to all the tricks, while Harry Williams smiled benignly down upon his family. Ma Smith, Miss Bessie Blair, stood beside him and smiled indulgently at the antics of Uncle John and the children. Miss Overton played the mourning aunt to perfection, and her sorrowful condition proved very effective. The Infant Prodigy, Miss Messersmith, was a good little girl, and behaved herself in a more seemly manner than her brothers or her sister, Miss Edith Lane, who enjoyed her share of the fun.

Miss Florence Petrie deserves great credit for her successful impersonation of the manager and advance agent of the family, and for her many witty remarks during the evening.

A Battle Royal.

Thursday afternoon a disgraceful fight occurred in front of the news stand at Cranford in which one of the participants nearly had one of his fingers bitten off. Lewis Swendson, the expressman, stood in front of the news stand, when James Taylor, the hackdriver, it is said, began fooling with him, slapping him in the face. The Hewlett brothers, colored, stood near by, and told Taylor that he ought to be ashamed of himself striking a man much smaller than himself. At this Taylor sprang at the man of his size, Hewlett, and a regular scuffle took place A few moments later Dick Connors stepped between the men to separate them, when the other Hewlett brother pitched into Connors. For at least ten minutes the four men fought like Indians, and it was not safe for anyone to interfere. Connors' middle finger on his right hand was badly bitten by Hewlett, which seemed to quiet the disturbance. No arrests were made.

BOROUGH COUNCIL BUSINESS.

WATCHUNG AVENUE EXTENSION POSTPONED AGAIN.

Duer Street Residents Petition the council to Open That Thoroughfare—Dog Pound Established.

An adjourned meeting of the borough council was held last Friday, all the members being present. In the absence of Mayor Hegeman, president of the council, H. B. Lounsbury, acted as chairman.

Clerk Arnold read a communication from Horace J. Martin, township clerk, which stated that the township was now ready to meet the council and make the division of the money which is now held by them. The council set Monday evening, June 24th, and instructed the clerk to notify the township.

A petition was received from W. H. Brokaw asking for the opening of Duer street; also one from the following property owners: John Vetterlein, J. H. VanWinkle, A. W. Johnson, J. S. Armstrong, J. A. Thickstun, W. F. Cadmus, A. L. Force, Robert Love, J. H. Whitenack, T. S. Rose; D. VanWinkle, G. F. Edwards, A. M. Vanderbeek, P. M. French, A. V. D. Honeyman, E. C. Varney, W. H. Shotwell, Wilbur W. F. Randolph, F. E. Woodruff, D. L. Gulick.

The petitions were referred to the committee on streets and public health.

A bill of $103.10 in favor of the pay roll was presented by Collector H. N. Spencer and later ordered paid.

Mr. Peck stated that a new supply of hose was needed for the fire department as there was only 1,200 feet in good order and they were u[illegible] dry it properly. Bids had bee[illegible] for and at the next meeting he hoped to be able to report something definite. He also recommended the appointment of an assistant chief, and in a resolution suggested the name of J. J. Stahl to the position without compensation. The matter was laid over till the mayor returns. Mr. Peck also offered a resolution that Rudolph Speigel be confirmed a member of Warren Engine Company, which was done.

Mr. Smith reported that he had been unable to secure the services of a surveyor until it was known exactly what work was to be done. Mr. Lounsbury suggested that the advice of the borough counsel be secured before any action was taken.

In accordance with a resolution passed at the last meeting a dog pound was secured, and the law on dogs was ordered advertised. It was read last night and appears in another column of The Press.

Mr. Peck said that the harness used on the engine horses of the fire department was worn out, and that it was absolutely necessary to secure a new harness, which he did at a cost of $120, and he offered a resolution that the Council authorize the commitee to purchase the same, which was done.

Mr. Lounsbury stated that he had seen the borough counsel, and the latter told him that the council was obliged to send J. P. Humble a notice to appear personally, and state his objections to opening Watchung avenue, and that it would be bettter to lay the matter over till that time. It was so decided.

Council then adjourned to Friday evening, June 28th.

Will Move to Waverly.

A large tract of land lying between the Waverly fair grounds and the Pennsylvania Railroad depot at Elizabeth has been purchased by the Western Electric Instrument Company of Newark. This company now has an extensive plant at the corner of William and Shipman streets, Newark, but finds its present quarters much too cramped for the volume of business done. The land just purchased is a plot of about forty-eight acres and on this property it is intended to erect not only the factory building, but a number of cottages for the employes.

Wants an Accounting.

A trunkful of books was in evidence in the Chancery chambers in Newark yesterday, when the case of Mrs. Caroline C. Pratt, of Rahway, against David A. Boody and others was called by Vice-Chancellor Emery. The books were not offered in evidence yesterday, but were sent to Newark in order to avoid delay in case the Vice-Chancellor called for them. The suit is an interesting one, and is along the same lines as the famous Doolittle case in Chancery several months ago.

Great Invention.

A townsman of great ability has hit upon a scheme of lighting the district by means of lightning bugs attached to cats' tails. He is so modest that he has forbidden the publication of his name, which we much regret. He says genial town clerk Robinson is also going into the business and has effected a "corner" in cats. There is no truth, however, in this statement. Mr. Robinson proposes having light thrown upon a very interesting matter, but he is not in the cat business, and the bug light would be too feeble for his purpose.—Metuchen Courier.

Flim Flammers at Westfield.

A bold flim flam game was worked on Mrs. Schmitt, wife of the Westfield baker, on Saturday. Two young men in a buggy stopped in front of the store and leaving their horse, stepped inside. One purchased 20 cents worth of cakes, offering in payment a $10 bill. Mrs. Schmitt counted out the change and was about to give it to the man, when the purchaser found he had 20 cents and asked for his $10 bill. The obliging saleswoman took it from the drawer. At that moment one of the men grabbed it. Both bolted outside, leaped into the buggy and drove off. Although six men were working on the new sidewalk by the door, none noticed the robbery. Mrs. Schmitt did not recover from her consternation or give the alarm till the rogues had disappeared.

Don't Want the Fountain.

A difference of opinion exists between the trustees of the First Presbyterian church and the members of the Town Council of Montclair, in regard to the location for a drinking fountain. The trustees don't want the new fountain in front of the church. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union are urging that the fountain be erected at once, because of its need by man and beast. Charles W. Sandford a member of the council and a member of the church, also has effected a postponement until an opportunity can be given to the trustees to give their reasons for not wanting it in front of the church property.

Transmission Company Elect.

The Bi-Metallic Electric Transmission company, held their annual meeting yesterday afternoon at their New Jersey office, 428 East Sixth street and re-elected the following officers:

President — Colonel William H. Eckert; Vice-President — Willard M. Miner of Plainfield; Secretary and Treasurer—William Stanley Eckert.

Republicans Are Glad.

The Republicans of New Brunswick are pleased because of the passage over the Governor's veto of the bill which gives the Mayor the power to cast a vote in the common council in case there is a tie or no majority vote. All that remains to be done before the common council becomes a Republican body is for the Assembly to concur in the action of the Senate, which it is believed will be done. This will give the Republicans in Middlesex county control of two bodies, the common council and the Board of Freeholders. It is understood that the Democrats will test the constitutionality of the bill. Seven attempts have been made by the common council to organize, and another effort will be made on Monday evening.

Was An Exemplary Young Man.

In the death of John H. Klemser at Scotch Plains the community loses an exemplary young man, whose promise of a successful business career was exceedingly bright. Mr. Klemser had long been in the employ of Ernest Ackerman in the office of his cement works in New York, who valued his services very highly. The young man was a great favorite among the Jr. O. U. A. M., and Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company of which he was a member. His father has charge of the Warren Ackerman estate. The funeral will be held at Scotch Plains, Sunday afternoon at half past two o'clock, in the Baptist church.

Westfield Bound to Kick.

Already the complaints of Westfield people are emphatic and loud over the blocking of the streets by sewer excavations. The streets are torn up in half a dozen places, and one of the most traveled thoroughfares in town, Prospect street, from North avenue to Broad, has been closed for over a week.

SCOTCH PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

All Is Not Smooth Sailing With the Borough Commission.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Collins are in our village on a visit to Mr. Collins's parents.

Dr. Wescott has changed his residence to Fanwood, retaining an office in Scotch Plains.

Frederick Happel, who recently fractured his kneecap, is getting along very satisfactorily.

Mrs. Braker, the wife of the pastor of the Baptist church, has left for a few weeks on a visit to her parents in Pennsylvania.

The Young People's Junior Christian Endeavor Society will be given a reception on Saturday afternoon in the lecture room of the Baptist church.

By an arrangement with Myron Young, the Scotch Plains ball club have secured a new ball ground on Park avenue, for which they pay $25 for the season.

The quarterly meeting of the Exempt Fireman's Association of Fanwood was held in the truck house on Monday evening. No business other than the collection of fines and dues was transacted.

The genial Wm. Gibbs withdraws from us his presence and that of his family for the summer to take a tour north. His place will be occupied during his absence by a Mr. Miller from New York.

On Sunday evening last Mr. Taylor, of Plainfield, led the meeting of the young people in the Baptist church. His topic was the "Good Samaritan." He proved a very pleasant speaker, and his remarks were highly appreciated.

Improvements in our immediate vicinity are "few and far between." Nevertheless they are sometimes made. Benjamin Elliott has built a new blacksmith shop on the property recently purchased by him on the corner of Park and Mountain avenues and removed there from his old stand.

The improvements in Fanwood go steadily forward. John Stevens has contracted with John Boorman, for the erection of a dwelling, and from the care with which it is reported the materials are selected, it may be expeted that that edifice will prove an additional attraction to the place. Messrs. Westphal and Coward are erecting a barn for Benjamin Urner on his place.

All is not smooth sailing on the new Fanwood Borough Commission so it appears. The two factions may be designated as the pros and cons. The former are elated by their victory; the latter are breathing out threatenings and slaughter. An application was made by the latter to the Township Committee on Monday evening, requesting ihem to instruct their counsel to investigate the matter and institute proceedings to have the recent election declared illegal. The application was refused the committee deeming it best that the beligrents should fight out their own battles in their own way.

EIGHT MEN BREAK JAIL.

Desperate Men Get Away From Middlesex County Jail.

New Brunswick, N. J., June 14.—Eight desperate men, one of them an alleged murderer, escaped from the county jail here at two o'clock this morning.

All the available police in the county are after them on foot and on horseback, but up to noon none had been captured.

George Stefanko, who is under indictment for killing Stephen Nagy, at Perth Amboy, is the most dangerous man in the lot, and it is not believed that he will be taken alive.

The others who escaped are: Thomas Kinsly, John Murphy, John Clark and Costello, all of Perth Amboy, in jail awaiting trial for highway robbery on April 17th last, and Joseph Kelly, Louis Fisher and Frank Williams, who are charged with being members of the notorious gang of incendiaries which have been implicated in the destruction of much property in New Brunswick.

The escape was due, it is claimed, to the carelessness of the jailer, David Messler, who secured the position about a month ago, displacing James Grady.

Thirty-Four Killed.

Fall River, Mass., June 14th.—The worst catastrophe that has visited the city since the Granite mill fire occurred this morning at the Langley loom harness shop on County street. A new boiler of the Kendall make exploded in the basement of the two-story wooden building, blowing out the entire end of the building, knockthe supports from the side and allowing the upper floors to settle in the ruins. There were forty-five persons at work in the shop, and only eleven are known to have escaped.

Another June Wedding.

Cards are out announcing the coming marriage of Miss Sadie Currie, of Arlington avenue, to Percy VanAlstyne. The wedding will take place Wednesday, June 26th.

WEDDED MID JUNE BLOSSOMS.

THE MARRIAGE BELL CLAPPER AN ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Dainty Wedding in North Plainfield—Miss Josie Elliott VanArsdale Becomes Mrs. Garrett Conover.

"Clear shining after rain" marked the time of the marriage of Rev. Garrett Conover to Josie Elliott VanArsdale, late Thursday afternoon, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. John K. VanArsdale of Grove street. Lohengrin's wedding march was played by Willard Case previous to the ceremony.

Miss Bessie VanArsdale, the little sister of the bride, carrying pink roses, preceded the bride and groom to the corner of the parlor, where, surrounded by blossoms and ferns, they took the solemn marriage vows. Over them hung a marriage bell of white daisies, the clapper of which was a flashing electric light. This ingenious device was the work of the young electrician, Clarence Brokaw. The brilliant clapper made a most effective marriage bell, serving the double purpose of illumination and decoration. Rev. Dr. Richards performed the ceremony.

The bride's gown was white silk, trimmed with point lace, an heirloom. The veil was of tulle and the bridal bouquet of white roses. Ferns, daisies and roses were everywhere, fit accompaniments of the bride in her flowerlike loveliness. Only the immediate relatives of the bride and groom were present. A delicious supper was served by Max Wiertz.

Mr. and Mrs. Conover left town at eight o'clock, amid the conventional shower of rice. A large number of beautiful and useful presents had preceded the happy couple to their new home at Hawthorne, near Paterson, where Mr. Conover has accepted a pastorate. The newly married couple are followed by the congratulations and heartfelt wishes of many friends for their happiness, prosperity and usefulness.

THE CITY IS A DEBTOR.

RECEIVES MORE THAN IT GIVES TO THE HOSPITAL.

A Plain Statement of Facts By a Member of the Board of Governors—City Only Contributed $5.71 Last Year.

In reference to the item in The Daily Press Wednesday on the care of the poor and friendless sick of the city in Muhlenberg Hospital, the following facts have been furnished by a member of the Board of Governors:

The hospital has no facilities for the care of and does not receive persons having contagious diseases, nor insane persons, nor cases of drunkenness or of delirium tremens, but never has a sick or injured person been refused admittance because he had no money nor friends. Last year, besides the dispensary patients, there were in the hospital 177 patients. Of these, 112 were cared for free, only sixty-five paid or were paid for. For one patient, who was in the hospital eight days, the city paid out of its poor fund $5.71. That was the only amount received from the city.

The contributions to the support of the hospital in the city are not general. The estimated population of Plainfield and North Plainfield is 18,000. Only about 100 persons contributed directly to the treasury of the hospital during the year. Those contributing through the Woman's Auxlliary Board are to a great extent members of the same families as the one hundred mentioned. From the thirty or forty churches in the city and borough the hospital Sunday collections amount to $150 only.

The cash expenditure in maintaining the hospital last year, exclusive of building and furnishing the new operating room, was about $6,250. Of this $1,000 came from the county, $2,000 from individual contributors, $900 from the Woman's Auxiliary Board, $450 from hospital Sunday collections, $1,300 from patients, and $600 from the balance on hand at the beginning of the year.

It may be seen from the above facts that the hospital is a charitable institution, supported in very large degree by a comparatively few citizens, and that the city instead of being an unrecompensed benefactor, is a receiver of gratuitous benefit from the hospital; and the amount of that benefit is increasing every year.

More Macadamized Roads Needed.

The Somerset county Board of Freeholders met in Somerville on Wednesday, at which time Nelson Y. Dungan spoke on a petition which had been presented by citizens of North Plainfield township, asking that the road leading from Somerset street to Greenbrook be macadamized under the new stone-road act. Mr. Dungan said that the citizens had complied with the law and the board has no other recourse than to grant the petition. The petition was referred.

The board will meet in North Plainfield next Wednesday.

PELTERING RAIN DROPS FELL.

VIVID LIGHTNING AND RUMBLING THUNDER FILLED THE AIR.

Franklin School Flag Staff Shattered—Y. M. C. A. Locker Room Flooded—Sewer Work Hindered.

From The Press of June 13.

Peltering rain, vivid flashes of lightning and rumbling thunder, that at times broke into deafening cracks, filled the atmospheric space around about Plainfield yesterday afternoon, and incidentally raised havoc in several directions. The volume of water which fell during the shower was the greatest that this section has experienced in some time. For fully a half hour the rain fell in huge drops which soon converted the street gutters into small rivers, whose torrentous like streams carried every movable obstacle on to the sewer openings. The amount of water was too great for the pipes to carry off as fast as it flowed, the result of which was that it backed up in the streets and formed miniature lakes of murky colored water. Especially so was this the case between North avenue and Fourth street on Park avenue, where under the railroad bridge horses were obliged to splash through water up to their knees.

On Grant avenue the sewer contractors were occasioned no end of trouble. Only by hustling work on the part of the employes was the sheathing boards and other wooden tools prevented from being carried down to Greenbrook and swept out of their reach. In other sections of the city the open trenches were partly filled with water, necessitating their being decided to build a representative float baled out before work could be resumed.

The excessive flow of water from the roof of the electric light station slightly disarranged the valve of the fire gong, so that the five o'clock testblow was a little irregular. It was soon remedied, however.

Scarcely any damage was done to the local telephone system, and Manager Runyon had it perfect running order by seven o'clock.

Yesterday's thunder storm caused a little excitement in the Y. M. C. A. building. The windows to the locker room are below the surface, and the downpour filled up the openings in front of them until the water began to pour into the room itself. The contents of a number of the lockers were completely soaked, while there were several inches of water on the floor.

During the severe thunder storm yesterday afternoon, the fuse of the electric motor, which runs the elevator in the Babcock building, was burned out, thus disabling it for the balance of the evening. The damage was repaired this morning.

During the heavy thunder storm yesterday afternoon lightning struck the large flag-pole on the Franklin school and shattered it into many pieces. A portion of the pole remains intact, but many large pieces fell in the yard and on the sidewalk.

A REPRESENTATIVE FLOAT.

Executive Committee Decide to Place One in the Parade.

The executive committee of the general Fourth of July celebration committee did some effective work at their weeting in the rooms of Alert Hose Company last night.

The committee on grounds reported that they had the option of three places. They are the city park, Boice's orchard, and Martine's grove. It is probable that the latter will be used for the evening display of fireworks.

Sub-committees on music and coaches were appointed, and it was decided to build a representative float for the parade. Other minor committees were appointed. An informal report from the subscription committee showed that about $500 of the $1,000 necessary to be raised had been contributed.

A JOKING ACCIDENT.

George O. Stevens Makes Light of His Wagon Breaking Down.

Geo. O. Stevens, the West Front street coal merchant, is doing a smashing business. One of his coal wagons broke down in front of the Baptist church this morning. He said, when seen by a Daily Press reporter this morning:

"The wheel was tired and coal has come down, but the wheel was not lonesome because it had some fellows with it. I am glad the wagon wasn't knocked speechless; it didn't lose its tongue. The wheel spoke. The axle reached for the body and felt glad that that part was stouter. It really all happened because the wagon was tired of riding on a rail."

Commencement to Be Resumed.

After several years without commencement exercises, Leal's School will again continue the custom, and Friday evening special exercises will be held in Y. M. C. A. hall. There will be an address and the announcing of the honorable mentions in the various studies.

THE EDITOR TOOK A LOOK,

AND THEN WRITES HORRIBLY OF SUMMIT SEWAGE BEDS.

Editor Day First Says the Farm Is Excellent, Then Says That It Is Like a Swill Barrel—An Awful Trip.

Editor George W. Day of the Dunellen Call accompanied a party to the Summit sewage beds last Sunday, and in his paper of Thursday tells of his trip. He starts off this way:

> The farm is at least two miles from the town on an unused road and is admirably situated and suited for the purpose. It is a sand hill from which all the building sand used to be obtained and is entirely surrounded by woods. The farm is laid out in fifty-two beds which are kept in an excellent condition by the two men constantly employed.

Then this is given as an illustration of the smell:

> Having heard so much about drinking the effluent which comes from the underdrains the committee thought they would investigate and found the stream which was clear but had the smell of a sour swill barrel and concluded that it was utterly unfit to even wash in.

After this he tells of what the man in charge said:

> The man in charge was asked if there was much solid matter flowed out upon the beds and he said he thought if we looked sharp we could see it—we saw it before. He said in reply to the question that the sewer was flushed twice a week and for the first hour at flushing time it was "pretty rotten." Every once in a while some member of the committee would call from a distant bed to "come and smell this," but they generally had sufficient perfume where they were. The whole farm smells like just what it is—a big cesspool—and the theory of intermittent filtration is simply a perfect farce.

But to cap the climax one of the horses was taken sick and Mr. Day writes as follows:

> Upon returning to the road it was found that one of Mr. Gray's team had been taken sick—not being accustomed to cesspool atmosphere—and had to be carefully driven to Springfield, where a stop was made for supper, to which only one of the party did justice, the rest having apparently lost their appetites. The team had to be walked home and did not arrive until nearly midnight.

BOARD OF TRADE TO MOVE.

WILL OCCUPY ROOMS IN THE BABCOCK BUILDING.

New Board of Directors and Officers Elected for the Ensuing Year—New Members to Join.

The Board of Trade, which has apparently been doing little in the line of actual business, met Wednesday with a view of regaining their former enthusiasm; and they succeeded admirably.

Many plans were proposed which if carried out will prove a benefit to the town. In the first place they decided to give up their present quarters, as more desirable ones have been secured in the Babcock building. They will have the three rooms formerly occupied by The Sabbath Recorder, and will move about July 1st.

Another subject that received consideration was that of reducing the dues to meet the approval of those desiring to join.

A list of names are in readiness to be presented for membership as soon as the board moves.

The following were elected as board of directors: E. R. Pope, F. W. Runyon, J. B. Coward, J. Fred MacDonald, W. R. Codington, J.C. Pope, J. D. Runyon, L. B. Woolston, J. A. Smith, H. H. Coward, George Griffin. The directors then met and elected the following officers: President—E.R. Pope; first vice-president—J. Fred MacDonald; second vice-president—J. Aug. Smith; secretary—Geo. Griffin; treasurer—H. H. Coward.

COMMENCEMENT AT DUNELLEN.

Close of the Public School With Appropriate Exercises.

The commencement exercises of the Dunellen public school were held last evening in the chapel of the Presbyterian church. The room was prettily decoratad with flowers, ferns and greens, and the class motto, "Strive for the Best," was gracefully hung in the centre of the wall back of the platform, around which was a pleasing arrangement of flowers. Excellent music was furnished by the school, accompanied by the piano.

The essays and recitations by the graduates were admirably rendered and reflected much credit. Those graduating were: Lillie Gaskil, Mary Touzeau, Bertie Gaskil, Jessie Maltby, Clarence Marlow, Herbert Wyckoff and Fred Giddis. Principal Whitney presided, and Rev. Frank Fletcher presented the diplomas and prizes. A reception followed the exercises, and was largely attended.

A pleasing recitation was given by Miss Bolton of Glen Gardner. Cake and ice cream were served, and thus closed a memorable event in the school history.

A Practical Firm.

Charles Rice and Theodore Hart, two practical and experienced paperhangers and painters, have formed a partnership and will soon establish a place of business in the city. They have taken the agency for Alfred Peats prize design wall papers, which are marvels of beauty and superior to any foreign production in the market.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

Ancient Kingdoms Reformed With a Pen Stroke.

JOSEPH MADE RULER OF SPAIN.

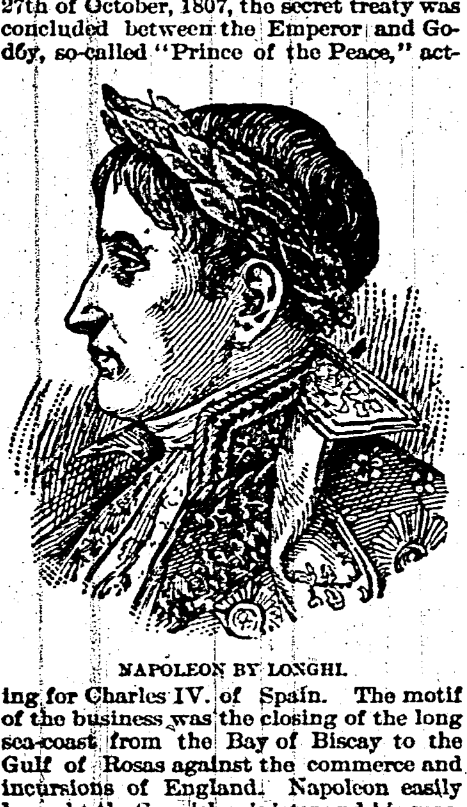
Divorce of Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson—Roman States Wrested From the Pope—Austrians Crushed at Wagram. Spanish Army Annihilated.

[Copyright, 1895, by John Clark Ridpath.]

XVIII.—FROM BAYONNE TO WAGRAM.

In Paris and the environs of Paris Napoleon had five residences. The magnificent Tuilleries—so-called from being the site of an old tile-factory of the Middle Ages—came to him with the reminiscences of Bourbonism. Though it was the public seat of the Empire, it was never a favorite residence. The palace of the Elysee was the private city-home of the Emperor. Here he resided when the war fever was not on. Fontainebleau, thirty-seven miles from the city, was the home in which Napoleon found himself at greatest ease. The palace of St. Cloud was on the left bank of the Seine, a mile and a-half from the city ramparts. Malmaison was the home and property of the Empress Josephine, given to her by her husband. Here Napoleon's domestic life shone in fitful gleams of happiness; but the days were not unclouded.

It was at Fontainebleau that, on the 27th of October, 1807, the secret treaty was concluded between the Emperor and Godoy, so-called "Prince of the Peace," acting for Charles IV. of Spain. The motif of the business was the closing of the long sea-coast from the Bay of Biscay to the Gulf of Rosas against the commerce and incursions of England. Napoleon easily brought the Spanish minister and his master under his influence. It was agreed that the compact between them should be confirmed by a partition of Portugal. Godoy received his bribe of 15,000,000 francs!



NAPOLEON BY LONGHI.

Marshal Junot was sent with an army corps to Portugal, and on the 30th of November, 1807, he entered Lisbon. Maria I. and the prince regent John and the royal family, taking to flight, found refuge in Brazil. Junot published his master's celebrated proclamation to the effect that the House of Braganca had ceased to reign. For the time it appeared that the reformation of ancient kingdoms might be effected with pen-stroke and proclamation.

The Spanish Bourbons had fallen into an imbroglio that might well excuse the interference of a foreign power. Charles IV. was virtually a fool. The queen, who ruled him, was devoid of virtue. Godoy, her favorite, who ruled her, was a conspirator. Don Ferdinand, prince of Asturias and heir to the crown, intrigued to take his father's life! The king, to save Godoy, was induced by a mob to resign the throne to his loving son, who took the title of Ferdinand VII. Charles, however, instead of embarking for America, according to the compact, soon sought to recover his crown, and appealed to Napoleon to assist him.

It was the appeal of a sick sheep to a healthy lion! The lion invited the sheep and the household of the sheep to meet him at Bayonne, on the frontier. There, in the first week in May, 1808, was held the conference of the lion and the sheep. The lion said that they should all resign their claims to him! Ferdinand should have the kingdom of Etruria. Charles should receive the castle and parks of Chambord, and a pension of 6,000,000 francs. The rest should be cared for. Ferdinand remonstrated, and ventured on a rupture, for which he and Don Carlos were imprisoned at Valencai. A proclamation was issued that the House of Bourbon had ceased to reign. A Junta was convened in Castile; a new constitution was formed, and on the 6th of June, 1808, Joseph Bonaparte was declared king of Spain and the Indies.

The pacification of the peninsula was assigned to Murat, who succeeded in reducing the royalists. He would himself fain be king of Spain; but Napoleon preferred his brother for that important trust. Murat must content himself with the crown of the Two Sicilies and the title of Joachim I.

Joseph on his arrival at Madrid found himself among a hostile people. He perceived that he was regarded as an alien and usurper, and that his following—though it embraced the ablest leaders and a majority of the urban population—was interested and deceptious.

Personal forces now again appeared contending with the absolute. Jerome Bonaparte, youngest brother of Napoleon, being at Washington, was introduced to the Pattersons of Baltimore. At the age of nineteen he took Elizabeth Patterson for his wife. The marriage was solemnized by Bishop Carroll. Jerome desired to return with his American bride to France; but his mother declared the marriage invalid, on account of the son's minority. An Imperial edict was issued to that effect. The Emperor forbade his brother to bring his wife to France, and called on the Pope to annul the marriage.

Pius VII. refused to grant the divorce. From 1805 to 1807 Jerome and his beautiful wife were kept aloof. Meanwhile, on both sea and land, he displayed greater talents than were shown by any other Bonaparte save only the Great One. The Emperor wanted his brilliant youngest brother—who in case of failure of heirs to himself was declared successor to the Empire—to be king of Westphalia. He ordered him to take in marriage the princess Catharine of Wurtemberg. The wishes of Jerome and the despair of his wife were put aside as sentimental trifles, and the new political marriage was confirmed in August of 1807.

He who had crowned Napoleon in Notre Dame now broke with him—and broke himself against him. In February of 1808 the angry Emperor ordered General Miollis to occupy Rome. He proceeded to punish the Holy Father by taking away the provinces of Ancona, Macerata, Fermo and Urbino, and annexing them to the kingdom of Italy. Still the Pope would not recede. The dispute became hot, and the Emperor wrested from the supreme pontiff the remainder of the Roman States. The Pope, in June of 1809, hurled back his defiance in a bull of excommunication. On the 6th of July, the French took possession of the Quirinal palace, gently seized the Holy Father, and conveyed him prisoner, first to Grenoble, and finally to Fontainebleau.

The Spanish people were the humblest of Catholics. The accession of Joseph Bonaparte as king was strongly opposed by a counter revolution. The patriots who favored the restoration of Ferdinand VII. were headed by the Junta of Seville, and their party was inflamed not a little by religious rancor on account of the indignities to the Pope. Nearly a half million soldiers were put into the field, and in support of these came into Spain English armies under Sir John Moore, Sir David Baird and Lieutenant-General Arthur Wellesley. English influence had long been predominant in Portugal, and the British lion now sought to lay his paw on Spain.

Critics have regarded the treaty of Bayonne and the rupture with the Pope as the beginning of Waterloo. The romancer—looking only at the dramatis personæ—might well begin his story of the overthrow of the First French Empire with the pretty face and soft hands of Elizabeth Patterson! But History, deeper than marriages and divorces, deeper than emperors and popes, sees rather the lines of eternal causation stretching through the dust and turmoil, and the mere persons of the play darting hither and yon like ephemera.

Napoleon's banner still rose and floated, for a while, in the highest sky. On the Continent none could resist him further. He sealed all harbors until the trade between London and Hamburg was carried on by way of Constantinople! The German princes, against all prejudices of race and tradition, sought eagerly to enter the Confederation of the Rhine. The displacement of the Spanish Bourbons seemed to conclude the career of that race. The old monarchy had become spectral. Louis XVIII.—so-called by the phantasmal past, fared on through the dim world. Refused an asylum in Italy, in Austria, in Saxony, in Prussia, he had found a brief respite at Mittau and Warsaw; but after Tilsit he must on and on, ever fatter in body and leaner in hope, to that ultimate hospital of obesity and despair—England.

The years 1808-9 had this complexion for Napoleon—that he might regard the past as finished. As to the future, he saw that shining like a sun through the east-windows of the Tuileries. Nevertheless there was peace nowhere. If the past was finished, the present was chaos and the future merely pregnant. His "Continental System"—by which Great Britain was to be left rotting on the sea—roused all the remaining rancor of races and nations. Sweden leagued with England. The Muscovite enthusiasm for France emitted at intervals sulphur instead of incense. The Czar was for Napoleon, but the Russians were not for the French. The Congress of Erfurt, in October of 1808, was hollow. Alexander and Napoleon were there; also the kings of Saxony, Wurtemberg and Westphalia; also the minor princes. The state of Europe was confirmed. The Czar should have Finland, Wallachia and Moldavia. A paper was sent to the demented king of England proffering peace—to which the duke of Portland replied that there could be no peace because the House of Bourbon had not been at Erfurt. He might as well have answered that there could be no more sunshine in the meadows of Europe until Geoffrey of Monmouth should be chancellor of daybreak!

While Napoleon was busy with the complications of 1807-8, Austria had been covertly arming for the renewal of war. The British ministry gave Francis II. four million pounds to break the peace! The early spring of 1809 found the Archduke Charles in Bavaria with a tremendous army. Napoleon heard the noise afar. Leaving Soult to finish the Spanish business, he hastened to Paris. By the 16th of April he was at Stuttgart. On the 18th, his headquarters were at Ingolstadt. Out of Wurtemberg and Baden, by the swiftest couriers, he evoked an army. He threw himself like a tornado on the Austrians, and hurled them back towards Bohemia. Vienna was uncovered, and on the 12th of May surrendered to the French.

On the 21st and 22nd of that month occurred the indecisive battles of Aspern and Essling. In June the progress of the French seemed to be delayed by the very excess of their advance and victories. On the 5th and 6th of July was fought the famous and sanguinary battle of Wagram, in which the Austrians were routed with a loss of fully 25,000 men. The Hapsburg Empire was as completely prostrated as Prussia had been after Jena. The humbled Francis came to a conference with Napoleon at Schonbrunn. He was obliged to purchase peace by the cession of the provinces of Dalmatia and Istria. Austrian Poland was divided between the Czar and the king of Saxony. Salzburg was given to Bavaria. Francis pledged his honor to renounce his alliance with England, and to uphold the continental system of Napoleon.

Meanwhile Soult, in command of the second corps in Spain, had on the 10th of November, 1808, annihilated the Spanish army at Burgos. He had wrested Corunna, Ferrol and Oporto from the English. But the tide turned in Northern Portugal, and the French were driven back by Wellington. A division under Marshal Moncey, marching on Valencia, was defeated, as was also General Dupont, in the battle of Baylen, in Andalusia, where the French losses amounted to nearly 20,000. In August of 1808 occurred the siege of Saragossa, memorable alike in history and poesy. Not until February of the following year was the stronghold surrendered to the French, whose losses during the siege are said to have exceeded 5[illegible],000!

It was just after these events that the hollow congress was held at Erfurt. By the first week of December, 1809, Napoleon had returned to Paris. During his recent stay in Vienna—perhaps in his conferences with Emperor Francis at Schonbrunn—he had had a thought. There was at that time in the palace of the Hapsburgs a girl just eighteen years of age. Josephine was forty-six and a-half!

JOHN CLARK RIDPATH.

Free Medical Aid For State Servants.

M. Felix Faure has decided that all the state and other domestics at the Elysee and their families are to receive medical assistance gratis. The cost is to be paid out of his own purse. All the ushers and other servants employed there by the state have been nearly 30 years at the Elysee. Since influenza visited Paris, in 1889, they have often suffered from that illness, and being old had often to seek medical assistance. As their salaries are not high, they thought this was hard, and so also thinks the president.

WANT BOROUGH GOVERNMENT.

Locust Grove People Tired of Westfield Dictorial Methods.

Steps are being taken at Locust Grove, the part of Westfield township, where the sewer is the strongest, to have that part set off in a borough. Starting from the Scotch Plains line, the proposed borough line will follow Brightwood avenue to Chestnut street, and thence to Broad street, along Broad street east through Branch Mills to the Springfield line. There are 116 voters in this district, and it includes the best farming lands in the township. This is the first instance where the farming district has sought to form a borough under the Borough law and sever its connection with the village government. It has always been the village that has favored the borough. People in the village object strongly to the secession, but they are powerless to prevent it, as only those within the lines of the proposed borough have any voice in the matter, and they are unanimous for severing connection with the village.

Look Out for Her.

A young woman, dressed in mourning and of pleasing appearance, is going about Elizabeth collecting money for the new building which, she says, is to be erected in connection with Weitminster Hope chapel. The people of Elizabeth and vicinity are warned that she has no authority whatever to collect funds. The building was opened last October, consequently there is no new building to be erected, and the young woman is collecting money on false pretenses.

Who Wants to Go?

Secretary J. H. Manning, of the Y. M. C. A., has a received letter from E. H. Foot, secretary of the Bedford branch in Brooklyn, in which he states that their party to the Northfield camp will have room for three more members, and he would be pleased to have some of tho Plainfield members go along. The party will be absent from June 28th to July 7th.

—The second annual picnic of the Plainfield Outing club will be held in Vail's grove on the Fourth of July, afternoon and evening. The committee of arrangements consists of D. White, J. Collins, W. Sullivan, and F. Miner. Eugene O'Reilly will furnish the music.

—The elm trees on Central avenue, Park street and Westfield avenue, Westfield, begin to show the ravages made by the elm leaf beetle. The matter of preserving the trees will be brought to the attention of the Township Committee at their next meeting, Monday evening.

—The proceeds from the sale of the "Woman's Edition of the Montclair Times," it is now ascertained, will complete for the Children's Home the $1,200 fund which Mrs. George Inness, Jr., had promised to double if raised, so that the building expenses of the Home could be guaranteed.

STABBED SIX MEN AND ESCAPED.

Desperate Battle for Liberty by a Negro Accused of Attempted Murder.

"Jake" Jones, a burly negro, who is wanted for the attempted murder of an aged couple near New Market some months ago, made a desperate fight for liberty near Somerville Sunday night, in which he seriously injured six men. Jones appeared at the tramps rendezvous, near the Central Railroad, Sunday morning. He fought with an old acquaintance, who in return revealed his identity to the police.

A plan was at once laid to capture him in which a number of the tramps volunteered to aid the police. He was surrounded early in the evening, and began a fierce fight for liberty. "Umbrella Charley," the king of the tramps, was the first to approach him. He received a stab wound in the head and had his right ear severed. The negro then cut his way through the crowd, inflicting serious wounds on a number of his intended captors. The blade of his knife snapped as he cut his sixth victim. He then made a dash for a passing coal train, which he boarded and escaped. Most of the injured men are tramps.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Druggist H. J. Fleischauer now rides a Premier Wheel.

Postmaster John M. Hetfield has purchased from the agent, William H. Rogers, a new seventeen-pound Spalding bicycle.

Plainfielders may soon expect to see Chief Doane go spinning along to fires on a bicycle. He has accomplished the feat of learning to ride.

Saturday afternoon the Elizabeth Athletic Cyclers will hold their annual club handicap race over the Morris avenue course. The event promises to be of considerable interest, as several of the riders have been training for the race, and one or two will try hard for records.

Many a champion has been brought low by dictatorial methods and ignoring the advice of the people who assisted him to fame and fortune. There is one man to whom Arthur Zimmerman owes his present position more than to all others combined, he will do well to follow his advice in most all things, for he is well qualified to advise.—American Wheelman.

A dispatch from Asbury Park last night says that the race between Zimmerman and Johnson has been declared off. It was announced at the State meet that the match had been arranged for $5,000 a side, but later Eck, Johnson's trainer, said he would not allow Johnson to race at Asbury Park. He avers that the Asbury Park people are partisans of Zimmerman.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mrs. Alfred B. Thorn, of Somerset street, is at present visiting her parents at Rahway.

Miss Florence Pond, of Washington avenue, has gone to Setauket, L. I., for a few weeks stay.

H. H. Lowry, Jr., of Park avenue, has taken an agency with the Prudential Insurance Company.

During the illness of D. L. Gulick, head clerk at U. B. Crane's hat store, R. Blair is filling the position.

Mrs. John Clapp and daughter, of Mercer avenue, are planning a trip to Europe, expecting to sail July third.

Misses Nettie Mattison and Fanny Mattison expect to go to South Carolina soon for the benefit of their health.

RECEPTION TO EDUCATORS.

President McCutchen Entertains in a Pleasant Manner.

President Samuel St. John McCutchen, of the North Plainfield Board of Education, and Mrs. McCutchen, entertained the principal and his wife, and the trustees of the school and their wives, together with the teachers, at their home on Rockview avenue Tuesday evening.

A few neighbors who are interested in school matters were also present. It was a charming affair and an evening of genuine sociability was spent, during which Mrs. Martin I. Cooley sang a very pretty soprano solo.

Refreshments were served during the evening. Those present were:

Principal and Mrs. C. E. Boss, Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Waring, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wells, Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Overton, J. H. Van Winkle, trustees and wives, and the following teachers: The Misses Cutler, Masso, Claypole, Bainbridge, Petrie, Kernan, Sydenham, Embury, Randolph, Ginn, Dale, Dally, McCoy, and Mackey.

HID IN THE HAYMOW.

But Constable Walpole, of Scotch Plains, Couldn't Be Fooled.

Neils Winters, of Scotch Plains, was arrested by Constable Robert Walpole at that place last night, charged with maliciously breaking down the fence and back-stop of the Scotch Plains baseball club.

The constable went to the home of his employer and asked if Winters was home, and was told that he was not. A search was then made about the premises, and after much difficulty he was discovered in the haymow of the barn.

He was brought to Plainfield and taken before Justice Newcorn, who, after hearing his story, held him $100 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Washingtonville.

A clambake and chowder party will be held in Charles Costell's woods, Gilette, Morris county, on the glorious Fourth.

George Beeching while driving along the valley to Summit yesterday had quite an exciting time. He was leading a horse in the rear of his gig, when the animal suddenly stopped, with the result of upsetting George into the highway. This frightened the horse drawing the vehicle and he started at a fast gait down the road, and soon freed himself from the wagon, leaving the remains scattered along the road. The runaway was captured a half mile from the scene of the accident. In the meantime George had picked himself up and meandered along until he came to the wrecked outfit.

McLoughlin Sentenced.

New York, June 19—It was hard for ex-Inspector McLaughlin to stand at the bar before Justice Barrett in the Court of Oyer and Terminer this morning and be sentenced to two years and six months in Sing Sing prison, and the former Inspector, desperately as he tried to hide it, showed just what an effort it cost him to maintain any degree of composure whatever.

Taking everything into consideration, McLaughlin was considered as having been very fortunate, as his sentence is a year less than that of ex-Captain Stephenson, convicted of having accepted a basket of peaches as a bribe.

Peculiar But Fortunate Accident.

A very peculiar accident occurred to the 8:29 train from Plainfield on the Central this morning at West Thirty-third Street, Bayonne, when the coupling pin between the engine and tender of the locomotive worked out of place, allowing the engine to go spinning down the track, while the automatic air brakes brought the coaches to a standstill with a jar. No other damage was done.

Boys Club to Close Until September.

The manual training department of the Boys club had its last session on Friday evening, June 14th, but the distribution of prizes will take place on the evening of Thursday, June 20th, at eight o'clock, which will also close the club rooms till September, when they will be reopened for the season of '95-'96. All friends and patrons of the club and boys are asked to be present at these closing exercises.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube be restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destored forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness, caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

The Patent Office Official Gazette, of June 4th inst., contains the full text of the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in the interference suit that has been in progress between Charles E. Buell of this city and three other claimants for the same invention during a number of months, the case having been before the Examiner, the Board of Examiners, and the Commissioner of Patents at the Patent Office.

This invention is for an entirely new automatic sprinkler for fire protection.

The decision of the Examiner of Interferences and the final decision of the Commissioner of Patents, recently published, award the patent to Mr. Buell, and it will be issued to him in due course.

In this hotly contested case Mr. Buell had associated with him Marcellus Bailey, Esq., the ablest patent lawyer in Washington, who made the closing argument that won the suit.

High School Reception.

The reception to be given by the High School classes of '93 and '94 to the class of '95 in the Casino on Thursday evening promises to be a big success. That the change from the school building to the Casino has met with wide approval is attested by the demand for tickets. A limited number of these are still left, and may be had at $1.50 per ticket (admitting two persons), from N. H. Probasco, East Front street, or Thomas A. Cuming, Putnam avenue.

I have two little grandchildren who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one-third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my housework. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kansas, was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Sometime ago I was troubled with an attack of rheumatism. I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm and was completely cured. I have since advised many of my friends and customers to try the remedy and all speak highly of it. Simon Goldbaum, San Luis Rey, Cal. For sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

MUST LEAVE TOWN.

Henry Nolan is Not a Good Citizen for Plainfield.

On complaint of John J. Reed, Policeman Frederickson arrested Henry Nolan last night at the place of the former in Netherwood. Mr. Reed appeared this morning against Nolan, charging him with using profane language and acting in a disorderly manner. Nolan claimed he was not guilty and that he acted like a gentleman, while Mr. Reed said that he had discharged Nolan and he had come back from New York, where he went with his wife, and was very disorderly. Judge Coddington suspended sentence with the proviso that he leave town immediately, which he promised to do.

GOV. WERTS REAPPOINTS.

The Most of Those Rejected By the Senate Last Week.

Gov. Werts yesterday appointed ad interim all the nominees whose names were sent by him to the Senate during the recent session of the Legislature, and whom the Senate refused to confirm, reserving only for further consideration the nominations of F. A. Canfield for State Assessor, and Chandler W. Riker for Circuit Court Judge.

The Governor disapproved the Prerogative Court Fee, and the New Brunswick Mayoralty bills, declaring both unconstitutional.

Dog War in Elizabeth.

The slaughter of unlicensed and unmuzzled dogs began at Elizabeth, yesterday. The police were the executioners, and two squads, armed with shotguns, went about the streets all day and killed sixty canines of various kinds. The carcasses filled two big wagons. Some valuable dogs which their owners neglected to muzzle were among the slain, and the angry owners threaten to bring suits against the city. The Chief of Police, Lenney, says the crusade will be kept up until every dog roaming about the streets without a muzzle or tag is put out of the way.

Crop Reports.

The weekly crop bulletin of the New Jersey Weather Service prints the following reports from Union county:

Clark Township—The weather has been excellent for all growth; heavy shower on 13th which did much damage by washing; potato bugs are great pests; corn looks well; some grass being cut.

Want Wagons To Carry Lights.

Lanterns on bicycles flash about the streets now like fireflies, though the ordinance has not yet become operative. In fact, the ordinance has not yet passed its third reading, and there is yet a chance for the wheelmen to make an effort to secure their rights by urging the city council to include all passenger-carrying vehicles in the provisions of the ordinance—Elizabeth Journal.

WELL RENDERED MUSIC.

LARGE ATTENDANCE AT MR. MACCLYMONT'S ORGAN RECITAL.

The Singing of Master Lenox Barnes Favorably Received—E. H. Bensen, the Basso, Participates.

As on all previous occasions the audience that attended the free organ recital given by William E. MacClymont in the First Presbyterian church was a thoroughly critical one. It is an established fact among Plainfield people that whether they get something for nothing or whether they have to pay for it, their judgement and criticism is just as severe.

The audience was a large one, consisting principally of musical people. Aside from Mr. MacClymont's playing, the feature of the evening was the appearance of Lexox Barnes, the soloist of the Church of All Angels in New York. His first rendition was "Cling to the Crucified" and it was all that could be desired. In spite of the fact that Master Barnes has appeared before large audiences many times he has a modesty that is taking. That he has a wonderful voice, there is no doubt and the audience were quick to discover it. As an encore he repeated the selection.

The appearance of E. H. Bensen was awaited with more or less anxiety. Plainfield people have listened to many noted bassos, and it may account for the slight reception given Mr. Bensen. However, his voice was pleasing, and though not possessing all that one could wish, he rendered very acceptably the "Bedouin Love Song."

Later Mr. Bensen sang "The Mighty Deep," which was more enjoyable than the first selection.

Master Barnes in part second gave "Thus Saith the Lord," which was a masterly effort in every respect. An encore was given and a delightful selection, "Sleep in Your Cradle Deep," was given in an enjoyable manner.

Mr. McClymont's playing is too well known by Plainfield people to admit of any criticism. Principally notable renditions in last night's programme were "Sonata de Camera," "Night in Grenada," "Mignon." The "March ~~Triumphal~~," dedicated to Mr. MacClymont's organ pupils, was heartily received, and the "Star Spangled Banner," with variations by Buck, brought the programme to a close.

Crop Reports.

The weekly crop bulletin of the New Jersey weather service publishes the following reports from Union and Somerset counties:

CLARK TOWNSHIP—All crops progressing and in first-class condition. The hay harvest will commence this week.

ELIZABETH—The crop conditions for the week have been generally favorable, but rain is much needed, especially for potatoes now coming into bloom; corn, oats and rye look very well; haying in progress; the crop will be up to the average. Rainfall, trace.

POTTERSVILLE—Very warm and dry; no rain, which is much needed; potatoes and garden truck wilting badly; some hay made during week, wheat ripening very fast; some rye ready to cut; potato bugs very plentiful.

SOMERVILLE—The highest temperature during the week was 92 degs. on the 20th, and the lowest 53 degs. on the 18th. The rainfall on 21st and 22d measured only 0.23 inch.

FRANKLIN PARK—Fine growing weather prevailed during the week. The warm nights have been most favorable to corn, but a good rain now would be the making of the hay, potato and oat crops; potatoes are in full flower and are setting well; orchard fruit, all varieties, will be below the average; some hay cut and cured but the farmers are waiting for a good rain before starting in on the bulk of the crop. The showers of the week, although light, were beneficial.

Voorhees for Governor

There were few politicians at the State House in Trenton yesterday, but among those on hand was President of the Senate Stokes, who is booking the candidacy of his friend, Foster M. Voorhees, for the Governorship.

ANNIE BEHIND THE BARS

BUT MOLLIE STILL ENJOYS THE FRESH AIR.

The MacDonald Girl, Side Partner of the Stevens Girl, Captured at Her Home.

Annie MacDonald who, with Mollie Stevens of this city, was rescued from the hands of Constable Wersinger by Edward Ryan and Charles Wood, of Linden township, on the night of Saturday, April 20th last, was Monday evening arrested at her home in Roselle and committed to jail.

There are two charges entered against Annie, one of disorderly conduct and the second larceny of a pair of handcuffs.

When the two girls were rescued from the constable by Ryan and Wood they were handcuffed together. Their rescuers took them to some house near by and, procuring a file, filed the bracelets and released the girls. The irons have never been recovered.

The girls both made good their escape, but Ryan and Wood were shortly afterward arrested for the part they took in the affair and are now suffering for it.

Ryan denied having had anything to do with the affair, but his companion chose the more manly part and pleaded guilty. Ryan had not been in jail long before it was discovered that he was a deserter from the regular army, and by request of the United States authorities was delivered over to them to be dealt with as a deserter. Woods is now serving time in jail.

The whereabouts of Mollie is still a mystery.

BIG LAND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

The Holding of Mr. Isham Transferred to a New Corporation.

The Security Land and Improvement Company filed articles of incorporation at the office of County Clerk Howard yesterday morning. The capital is $50,000, and the incorporators are Henry Heywood Isham, P. Hamilton Gilhooly and John J. Lowden.

The company has the holding of the great tracts of land in Elizabeth and Union county recently held by Mr. Isham, and a few days ago transferred by him to Judge Gilhooly, in consideration of $50,000, the big deed being filed on Monday last. There are fifty-nine tracts of land, mostly situate in Elizabeth. The others are in Linden and various sections of the county.

Try It On the Plainfield Bug.

John B. Smith of Rutgers College gave an address Friday before the Montclair Town Improvement society on "The Elm-Tree Beetle and the Preservation of the Elm Tree." He gave a description of the appearance and habits of the beetle, and said they could be exterminated by the use of either London purple or Paris green in the proportion of one pound of either to 150 gallons of water, one pound of stone or shell lime or two gallons of milk of lime being added to prevent injury to the foliage. Arsenate of lead he also declared to be a sure remedy. It is formed by adding four ounces of arsenate of soda and eleven ounces of acitate of lead to 100 gallons of water.

A Mean Miscreant.

Swimming is one of summer's delights to the boys, and the Scotch Plains back pond, better known as the "Notch," has been one of the favorite resorts for swimmers. Some enterprising boys constructed a platform and a springboard which added much to the pleasure of the place, but when a number of Plainfield boys went to take their accustomed swim, yesterday, they found that some evil-minded person had been before them with a saw and utterly destroyed the platform and springboard and scattered the remains all through the surrounding woods.

Rode a Frisky Horse.

A large number of Plainfielders went to South Plainfield yesterday to attend a clam bake given by Mr. Oltmann. A man from Somerville, who was present, attempted to ride a horse. The animal was very nervous and ran around the lots at a high rate of speed, and collided with a tree, throwing the rider to the ground with sufficient force to cut and bruise his face badly. A friend present drove to Plainfield and returned with Dr. Fritts, who dressed the injured man's wounds. He was taken to his home in Somerville later in the day.

Caught a Colored Rider.

Chief Grant, while making one of his tours yesterday afternoon on the outskirts, captured a colored man riding his wheel on the sidewalk. This morning he appeared before Judge Coddington and settled.

MR. C. P. RALLI REPLIES.

DISCUSSES STRICTURES PLACED ON THE HONEYMOON MANAGEMENT.

The Total Receipts of the Performance Were $591, While the Expenses Were $646.31.

To the Editor of The Daily Press:—In your issue of Tuesday there appeared an anonymous communication conveying certain strictures upon the business management of "A Russian Honeymoon," to which I ask your permission to reply through the same channel as briefly as possible.

The delay in forwarding the accounts to the treasurer of the "Relief Fund" has arisen from the endeavor on the part of the management to prevail upon the principal contracting parties to reduce the heavy amount of extras charged in addition to the contract figures, and also to a desire on the part of the management to gather in all claims before reporting the account. The propriety of this course has been justified by the appearance, within the last ten days only, of several claims, of the existence of which the management had not the slightest suspicion.

Replying to the second stricture of your correspondent, the total receipts for the performance were $591, the total expenditures and claims so far as can be learned to date, were $646.31, showing a deficit of $45.31.

As your correspondent is apparently much exercised over the possibility of the appearance in the accounts of a large item under the head of "Sundries." I take pleasure in saying that no such nebulous item will appear in the account.

I infer from your correspondent's remarks that Plainfield must have had some unpleasant experience in this line heretofore, but the accounts of "A Russian Honeymoon" will constitute an exception to the rule.

Reverting to the second stricture, without questioning the "bona fides" of your correspondent in the slightest degree, it seems incredible that any person in the audience on the 9th of May could have dwelt under such a misapprehension of the numbers present as to suppose they represented a sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars.

As a matter of fact, the total seating capacity of the house is 866, including the boxes.

On the night of the performance about 300 seats were vacant in the balcony, which looked like a desert; 86 seats were vacant in the orchestra circle, and 17 seats were vacant in the orchestra. The four upper boxes were occupied by members of the chorus when their duties did not require their attendance on the stage.

To a casual observer, the singularly fine appearance of the audience invited the conclusion that the house was better filled than it really was, but the receipts tell the tale, and as I have already had the honor of advising the management of the "Relief Fund," the audience present actually fell below the full attendance to which we have been accustomed at the Casino plays, notably, the attendance of the 21st of February last, and at the "Grey Mare" on May 3rd and 17th, 1894.

Apologizing for so far trespassing upon your valuable space, I remain,

Faithfully yours,

Constantine P. Ralli,
Business Manager.

Urging Woman's Suffrage.

Resolved, That we hereby earnestly appeal to all citizens, men and women, interested in public schools and in suffrage for women in connection therewith in the several townships of Union county, by petitions, public and parlor meetings, and otherwise, to do all possible prior to the next ensuing election, and in connection with the next Legislature, to ensure the passage by it of the pending amendment and its subsequent ratification by the electors of the State.

A Camp for the Cadets.

The North Plainfield Cadet Corps has become quite a flourishing institution. There are now forty-two members and a camp somewhere during the summer is being discussed. Last Monday evening a number of North Plainfield young men under the leadership of Robert Douglass asked the Cadets to unite with them for the Fourth of July parade, but the offer was refused. The cadet company will hold their drill this evening.

SILK FROM WOOD.

THE SILK WORM'S WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY CHEMICAL PROCESS.

The New Material Costs Less Than Natural Silk and Is Said to Be Beautiful. It is Already Worn in Europe and Patents Are Pending in Washington.

A process has been discovered by which a material closely resembling silk may be manufactured from wood. Even now women are walking about the streets of European cities in the most elaborate gowns of silk in the manufacture of which the worm had no part. In fact, the silkworm has lost its occupation.

The palm for this valuable discovery in chemical science must go to Switzerland, for a native of Zurich, Dr. Lehner by name, is the inventor of the process.

Some years ago he began to make observations on the habits and physical characteristics of the silkworm and became deeply interested in the subject. He discovered the chemical action which took place in the worm in producing its cocoon, and at odd times sought to counterfeit the work of nature. So convinced did he become of the feasibility of his ideas that he soon abandoned all other work and devoted his time to this single study, in which he has achieved a signal triumph.

In the process of manufacturing the new fabric the principal ingredients used are sprucewood pulp, cotton or jute waste, etc., combined with a large quantity of alcohol. The use of the substantial or solid materials mentioned creates a market for what was hitherto of no use whatever, being burned in factory furnaces to get it out of the way.

Spruce sawdust now has a market value, for this, as well as the other materials, are digested by a chemical process in which alcohol plays an important part. The material thus digested is so much like the cocoon spun by the silkworm that when the two are placed side by side in a finished state it takes an expert to determine which is which.

The artificial material at one state is in a liquid state, and of a density about equal to the ordinary syrup of commerce. When in this state a machine of Dr. Lehner's invention, which may be called an artificial silkworm, comes into play. This machine, which is very simple in construction, requiring so little attention that it can be kept at work with about as much labor as is devoted to a twenty-four hour clock, performs exactly the same mechanical work that a silkworm does. It draws from the liquid a continuous unbroken thread of even diameter and unlimited length. As this thread is spun another portion of the machine takes it up and twists it into any desired thickness of yarn with perfect regularity.

Thus the fabric can be made of any desired weight or thickness, so that it will be seasonable at all times.

This artificial silk has been spun in Bradford, England, and worked up into a large variety of fabrics. In the dyeing, weaving and finishing of these no special treatment has been found necessary. It has been dyed in all imaginable shades and colors, and owing to the peculiar qualities of the material it takes a dye more readily and gives a more brilliant effect than the natural article. In texture it is the equal of the best of Chinese and Italian silks, being soft and silken to the touch. It is expected that it will be used largely in combination with natural silk and cotton for producing brocaded effects. These latter have been so expensive lately as to be out of reach of all but the fattest purses. The new invention will greatly reduce the cost.

It would seem that this new process would give an immense impetus to the manufacture of textile fabrics all over the world, and it probably will, but Dr. Lehner also differs from the average inventor in that he combines financial cunning with his remarkable genius, so that every yard of this new material made will put so many pennies into his pocket.

Patents on the process have been obtained in most of the European countries, and an application for one in the United States is now on file at Washington, as well as in the patent office of the Canadian Government. A company with a capital stock of $1,500,000 is about to be formed in Montreal to manufacture the material. There has already been formed in England a company having a capital stock of $540,000, the inventor receiving $160,000 in cash and $180,000 in full paid shares, the remaining $200,000 being used as a working capital.

It was originally intended to manufacture the article in England, but when the demonstrating plant was established at Bradford it was found that there was a prohibitive tariff on alcohol used for manufacturing purposes. For that reason the plant was located at Glattburg, near Zurich, Germany, where there is no tax on alcohol used in manufactures. From this place the raw material is sent to England for manufacture.

OLD FASHIONED GIRLS.

Mrs Parkhurst Believes in Domestic Home Training.

Let us draw a word picture of an old fashioned girl, such as there used to be before a woman's college was conceived of. She received a good education in the common branches; after that she very likely went to a boarding school and was taught some of the accomplishments. When she came home her wise mother inducted her into the mysteries of home-making in all its departments. She must know how to cook and mend, she must be able to show an ignorant servant how to do her work, and when, as is often the case, there is no servant at hand she must do the work herself. A girl with such a training is a host in herself. No domestic cyclone can disturb her serenity. Knowledge is power. She feels that home is her sphere, and wields her scepter with dignity.

There is another picture at hand. It is of the girl of the period. She is not content with such an education as her mother received. A college training is the fad now, and go to college she must. With a three years' preparatory course and four years in college, she comes out a thoroughly educated girl, as far as books go.

Sometimes her knowledge so sets her above her mother and the home that she is utterly dissatisfied with the old surroundings. She must make a way for herself. Various avenues are open to her, but she has to push and jostle her way to success, for it means competition with men as well as with women.

This develops an aggressive and self-assertive spirit in which the womanly qualities are lost, or, if not lost, so buried as to need a resurrection trump to bring them to life again. Many avenues whereby women may support themselves are open to the sex now, but as said before, success in these lines means struggle, and struggle develops aggressive qualities.

It cannot be otherwise. And that aggressiveness asserts itself in the home. The mother is old fashioned in her ideas. The daughter has the fresher, newer knowledge, and is apt to think she knows more than her mother.

I do not wish to be understood as depreciating college training; but training should not end there. I remember hearing a lady in a noted college town say that she thought the college course should be supplemented by a two years' course in domestic training, and that by another two years in a school for manners; for the average college girl had no home training and very bad manners. Upon that remark I set myself to watch the college girls, and I must say her last remark at any rate was true.

It may be that the intense aggressiveness and the free and easy manners of the girl of to-day are only a swing of the pendulum from the kept-at-home and mothered girl of the former period. And perhaps the extreme to which the pendulum swings will be its own corrective, but the mothers cannot afford to ignore the present tendency.

It may not be time for a revolt, but it certainly is a time to look carefully at the tendency, and see if a wise detaining hand and a little careful direction cannot supplement the college training and turn the restless, aggressive energy into the legitimate lines of home-making and keeping.

A friend has said, "College training gives women broader views and takes them outside the petty cares and frictions of life." But the petty cares of life are the lot of many women. If college training will help them in the discharge of their duties and make them better equal to the emergencies of life then let us encourage it. But at the same time, the old fashioned mothers must assert their old fashioned ideas and insist upon home training and home culture to be as necessary as the college curriculum.

If mothers will take that position and maintain it there will be no need of revolt. Mothers still have power enough if they will use it, and a larger, wider culture, embracing the intellect and the heart, the head and the hands, will be the result.

NELLIE B. PARKHURST.

Did Columbus Do It?

Did Columbus really discover America? For a century his claim to this honor has stood secure and unimpeached. But quite recently an English royal geographer unearthed an old map in the Ambrosian Library at Milan, drawn by one Andrea Bianco, of Venice, in the year 1448. Bianco is known as probably the most famous cartographer of his time, and the map is pronounced the clearest and most accurately drawn of that century, so far as the European and African coasts are concerned. Carefully and distinctly presented on its outer edge is a bit of South American coast line, indicating that some navigator must have crossed the Atlantic forty-five years before Columbus first sailed from Palos.

A blind beggar exhibited a card inscribed as follows:

"Kind, charitable souls, don't be ashamed of giving me a half penny; I am blind."

W. W. Astor and Kate Field seem to be equally independent in their ideas of suspending their weeklies. Mr. Astor's Pall Mall Budget seemed to be successful, and he dropped it. HURT IN A RUNAWAY.

The Misses Coard Narrowly Escape Serious Injury.

Miss Mabel and Miss Alice Coard, of East Ninth street, met with a serious accident Thursday afternoon about five o'clock while they were out driving on Sixth street.

They turned from Sixth street into Sycamore street and the horse became frightened at the breaking of a shaft. Miss Alice Coard jumped from the wagon and was not injured, while Miss Mabel remained in the carriage till she was thrown out. It was first thought that she was fatally injured, and was carried to the porch of Mr. Adams' house nearby. Dr. Berg was called and discovered that there was a bad scalp wound back of the right ear. He dressed the wound and later a carriage from Hedden's livery was sent for and she was taken to her home.

The horse was captured near the residence of J. W. Yates. The wagon was a complete wreck.

JACK BENNER HURT.

Jumped From a Wagon and Fractured Two Bones in His Leg.

Jack Benner, of Fanwood, sustained injuries Thursday that will confine him to the house for some time. Not far from his house on South avenue he met a friend with a horse and wagon coming to Plainfield. He asked for a ride, which was readily granted, and soon after the girth holding the shaft broke. This frightened Mr. Benner and he commenced to yell at the horse. The animal was scared, and seeing the shaft near his head started to run. Mr. Benner climbed through the wagon and jumping out of the rear end he fractured two bones in the ankle of his left leg, and slightly injured the right knee. A horse and wagon happened along and he was taken home, when Dr. B. Van D Hedges was called and made him as comfortable as possible.

The broken girth was quickly repaired and the man came to Plainfield.

It will be some time before Mr. Benner will be able to walk.

CUPID HAS LOTS OF VICTIMS.

THREE MARRIAGES IN PLAINFIELD LAST NIGHT.

Two Were Church Weddings and One a Pretty Home Event—All Are Popular Young People.

St. Mary's R. C. church was the scene of a very pretty wedding Thursday afternoon at five o'clock when Miss Elizabeth Fitzgerald was united in marriage to Joen Watson, by Rev. Father Smyth. Long before the appointed hour a large number of friends had gathered to witness the impressive ceremony.

The bride entered first, leaning on the arm of Patrick O'Keefe, who was best man, and following was Miss Annie O'Neil, the bridesmaid, on the arm of the groom.

The bride wore a gown of light-blue Henrietta cloth, trimmed with point lace, and the bridesmaid was gowned in pale blue crepon, trimmed with fine lace.

After the ceremony all thought the bridal party was going to the home of the groom where the reception was to be held, but instead they took a ride to South Plainfield, and returned later when they found the guests present. The home at 991 Arlington avenue has just been handsomely furnished, and will make a commodious residence for Mr. and Mrs. Watson. The house was filled with many handsome and useful presents, including a costly selection of silverware, furniture, and china. A sumptuous wedding supper was served to the guests.

Mr. Watson is an employe of the Fisk Brothers at their New York office, and is very popular.

There were about fifty guests present at the reception, including relatives from Elizabeth and Plainfield.

Miss Lizzie Wierenga, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wierenga, was married to Michael Gill last Thursday at six o'clock at St. Mary's R. C. church, Rev. Father Smyth officiating.

The church was filled with friends of the contracting parties, who witnessed the tieing of the nuptial knot.

The bride wore a becoming brown traveling gown and carried a beautiful bouquet of white roses tied with white satin ribbon, while the bridemaid, Miss Maggie Wierenga, sister of the bride, wore a gown of the same and carried a bouquet of pink roses tied with pink satin ribbon. Both wore white leghorn hats which were very becoming.

At 7:30 o'clock a reception was held at the home, 212 Park avenue, which had been furnished by the groom. The decorations were pink and white.

A large number of handsome presents were received by Mr. and Mrs. Gill, and their friends wish them many years of happiness.

A splendid supper was served to the guest who were:

Mr. and Mrs. James Bly and daughter, of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Peter McDonough, Mr. and Mrs. James Wierenga, Mr. and Mrs. Dominick McNamee, Miss Kate Gabered, Miss Kate Dorgan, Miss Lizzie Gill, Miss Minnie Walsh, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Doyle, Mr. and Mrs. John Wierenga, Miss Maggie Strapp, Miss Kate Mahoney, James Strapp, Charles Flynn, Henry Wierenga, John Wierenga, and John Gill.

A very pretty home wedding was solemnized last Thursday at eight o'clock, when Miss Phebe Smalley was married to William Campbell. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride, 31 Linden avenue, by Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis.

The bride was gowned in white silk, and the bridesmaid, Miss Minnie Smalley, wore a gown of white. The best man was Elden S. Smalley, brother of the bride.

After hearty congratulations had been extended to the couple, refreshments were served.

Mr. and Mrs. Campbell were the recipients of many very handsome presents.

Those who witnessed the ceremony were: Mr. and Mrs. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smalley, Mr. and Mrs. Irving Smalley, Mrs. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. John Smalley, of Dunellen, Mr. and Mrs. Staats Titsworth and family, of New Market.

The bride and groom will reside at 213 Spooner avenue.

Women's Request Refused.

The request of the Woman's Town Improvement Association of Montclair to have the Health Board increased from five to seven members, in order to have a veterinary surgeon and a woman physician on the board, has been refused on the ground that the present number is sufficient to carry on the business. The town council refused to increase the board last night, on the ground that a woman is ineligible to membership on the board.

Big and Little Are Welcome.

All the prominent men and public officers of Union, Somerset, and Middlesex counties will be invited to attend the Fourth of July celebration in this city.

BUSINESS AND PLEASURE.

Joint Meeting of Union and Somerset County Board of Freeholders.

A special meeting of the bridge committee from the Union County Board of Chosen Freeholders and the Somerset County Board of Chosen Freeholders was held Thursday afternoon at three o'clock at Tiers-on-the-Lake.

The object of the meeting was to receive and accept plans and specifications made by Wm. Kirk for the erection of the Clinton avenue line bridge, which was done.

Bids for the building of the bridge will be received from now till July 10th at three o'clock, when the same members will again meet to give out the contract.

The following Somerset members were appointed a committee to act with the Union bridge committee in seeing that the work is properly done: L. E. Barkalew, Andrew Lutkins, R. Zergiebel, W. J. Logan and J. E. Ballantine.

After the business was transacted those present enjoyed the genial hospitality of Freeholder J. H. Tier and seated at his palatial lake house they were served with his delicious ice-cream. They all agreed that Mr. Tier was a host worth meeting. William Kirk in his usual jovial manner also made the occasion one of pleasure to all.

Those present were: Bridge Committee of Union County—Director J. Frank Hubbard, ex-officio, J. H. Tier, chairman, Martin I. Roll, J. C. Ogden, Dr. Westcott and Addison S. Clark; Somerset County members—J. C. Staats, chairman, Andrew Lutkins, J. E. Ballentine, Lewis E. Barkalew, Oliver Perry, Edward B. Hoagland, W. J. Logan, J. C. Everett, J. H. Schomp, Robert Zergiebel and A. P. Sutphen.

THE BOYS CAMP.

A Place Where Youngsters Can Have a Jolly, Happy Time.

For the past ten years a camp has been held each summer under the management of the State Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. It will be held this year on Lake Champlain, near Westport, Essex County, New York, during the month of July from the 9th to the 30th. A cordial invitation is extended to all boys between the ages of fourteen and seventeen to join the party. The expense of the trip is as follows: Five dollars and twenty-five cents a week covers board, tent hire, boats and transportation of baggage. The railway fare depends upon the size of the party, but the companies have always been liberal and promise a reduced rate. In the past ten years the aggregate attendence has been 514, and not accident has occurred to mar their pleasure. The motive is now as it was at first to have a jolly, happy time, and to teach practically that to have such a time it is not necessary to break out of wholesome restraints, nor to forget the Sabbath and religious habits, but to continue under circumstances that would make it always remembered as an outing not only full of pleasure but of profit as well.

Plainfield has been well represented in past years and the local Y. M. C. A. can be referred to by any who may desire to go.

The Town Marshal Arrested.

James Young, town marshal of Woodbridge, was arrested Monday on a charge of felonious assault, and held under $500 bonds to answer. The charge grew out of a fight at the Democratic primary. The Democrats of the town are divided into factions. James Young was nominated for committeeman, and the silk-stocking faction named F. H. P. Imbert. The Young faction resented opposition, and a free fight followed. Mr. Young has a couple of sons, and it is alleged they started the trouble. Claude Boland, a wealthy resident of Woodbridge, was the most severely hurt. He is a New York business man, and says he took no part in the fight, but went in between the men to separate them. While he was engaged in this good office, James Young, he alleges, rushed upon him with a heavy cane and struck him on the head. This is denied.

Bull Frog City Wants an Office.

A resident of Bull Frog city in speaking of the extension of the fire department and the organization of a hose company in that community, said that the residents there thought that if an assistant chief was to be elected it was no more than proper that that officer should be selected from their locality, as therein resided both active and exempt firemen among its citizens.

Somebody Will Wear Kid Gloves.

The chamois finishing plant of Chapot & Sons, at Washingtonville, was entered Thursday night, and two dozen valuable pelts stolen. Hereafter a watchman will be employed to remain in the factory each night.

Dog War Prosecuted.

Dog catcher Vandervoort succeeded in capturing another canine in the borough today.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING.

PERFORMED AMID FLOWERS AND CONGRATULATING FRIENDS.

Miss Lillie Dunn Garretson Becomes Mrs. George Macintyre—Rev. Dr. Richardson the Officiating Clergyman.

Thursday afternoon at five o'clock, surrounded by a bower of flowers and ferns, took place the marriage of Miss Lillie Dunn Garretson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Garretson, to George Milton Macintyre.

The bride looked charming, attired in pale gray faille française, trimmed with point lace, and carrying a bouquet of white bridal roses. She entered the parlor on the arm of the groom, preceded by Katie Garretson, sister of the bride, who was gowned in white, and acted as flower girl.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. W. Richardson, owing to the illness of the bride's pastor, Rev. Cornelius Schenck.

Mr. and Mrs. Macintyre received the hearty congratulations of the guests present for their future prosperity and happiness, and the many costly and useful presents also received gave evidence of the high esteem in which the popular couple are held.

A wedding supper was served, after which the bride and groom left on the 6:40 train for New York, and from there they will go to the Catskills to remain about ten days.

On their return they will take up their residence for a time at the home of the bride's parents on West Front street.

The decorations of the rooms were principally green, and in the hall smilax was artically trimmed about the stairs which ended in a handsome bouquet of white and pink roses.

Guests were present from Somerville, Roycefield, Brooklyn, Cleveland, Bayonne and Plainfield.

Mr. Macintyre is the junior member of the F. L. C. Martin Cycle Co.

The happy couple left the house amidst a shower of rice, and as the carriage passed through town a large pair of old shoes were seen hanging from the springs, which were fastened with white muslin.

The bride wore a traveling gown of brown that was very becoming.

Where Education Does Not Educate.

It is a fact to be regretted that every year at the commencement exercises, both in Plainfield and North Plainfield, there are people present who usually remain in the rear part of the building, and their interest is so small that they persist in talking and disturbing a large number of people who are anxious to hear. It is strange that with the educational facilities of these two places, these certain people never seem to be cognizant of other people's feelings.

First Fanwood Election.

The following were elected members of the Fanwood Borough Commission on Thursday afternoon. For three years, Benjamin Urner, L. J. Ellis, and F. D. Warren; for two years, A. McKown and A. D. Beeken; for one year, J. P. Stevens and [illegible] Robinson.

EFFORTS ARE REWARDED

Eighteen Graduates From the High School.

FROM STUDENTSHIP TO THE ALUMNI

Music Hall Filled With Friends of the Young Men and Women, Who Who Applaud Their Efforts—Dr. Raymond Tells of the Beneficiency of Education—The Prizes and Awards.

After years of earnest and persistent application to studies which would equip them to go out into the world to grasp with the sterner realities of life, nineteen young men and women stepped from the studentship to the alumni of the High School Thursday. The evolution was made in Music Hall where the commencement exercises were held, and to which point it seemed as if half the city had wended their way when the eye was cast over the vast audience who had pre-empted every seat and then overflowed into filling the available standing room in the rear of the hall. The audience contained the intelligence, wealth and fashion of Plainfield, and as viewed from the stage presented a kaleidoscope of an endless variety of beautiful gowns surrounding symmetrical forms of fair attendants, the effulgency of which was relieved to a certain extent by the conventional attire of their male escorts. A thousand or more fans moving to and fro gave a zest of life to the scene, while the busy hum of two thousand voices previous to the opening of the exercises talking of as many different incidents and phases of graduating events of previous years, imbued all with that qui vive feeling that varies the monotony of life and makes it worth living.

Previous to the opening of the exercises the Seventh Regiment Orchestra of New York, under the leadership of W. R. Rodgers, rendered an overture entitled "Light Cavalry." The music which was discoursed by these musicians was of a high rank, and therefore appreciated by the audience.

At the conclusion of the selection the graduating class marched on to the stage, and took seats in a semicircle, followed by the members of the Board of Education, Prof. H. M. Maxson, Rev. Dr. W. R. Richards and Dr. A. V. V. Raymond. The young lady members of the class were attired in white gowns. The class is as follows: Frances Estelle Bailey, John Vanderveer Beekman, Jr., Thomas Dezelle Blair, Valentine Laura Chandor, Frederick Coriell, Edward Osborne Clark, Edith Marion Darby, Henry Baldwin Drake, Laura Louise Emmons, Mabel Force, Clara Augusta Force, Helen Augusta Hazen, George Augustus Horne, Charles Burdette Morse, Etta Raybert, Robert Elwood Sebring, Edgar Irving Serrell, Bertha Shotwell Thorne, Isaac Edward Titsworth.

The invocation was offered by Dr. Richards, and after "Gems From Little Christopher" had been rendered by the orchestra, President Probasco of the Board of Education announced the salutatory and an essay by Miss Helen Augusta Hazen, who took for her subject, "Methods of Charity, Past and Present." Miss Hazen spoke in a clear, firm tone, without notes, and carried the attention of the audience with her throughout her essay, which was as follows:

Mr. President and members of the Board of Education; tonight I offer you a glad welcome in the name of the Class of '95, toward whom you have always shown such a kindly spirit, and in whose education you have so heartly co-operated with their instructors.

Citizens of Plainfield, you whose bounty has given us the education, the help, which we know will ever be valuable to us, to you I extend a hearty welcome. Equipped with this education, we go forth to cope with the great world well armed; some of us to join in instant combat, while others of us linger to make our weapons still more bright and keen.

We stand here tonight as witnesses for one of the greatest uses to which modern charity has been devoted. The public schools of today are but the perfected free educators of the Romans, those stern avaricious old warriors, who founded their common schools, not for the purpose of benefitting the poor, but for the purpose of guarding themselves against the evil which would result if the ever-increasing multitude of children were to grow up, uneducated and unrestrained to work destruction, in time, upon the aristocratic class, the patricians. The public school is but one way in which the State copes with vice; 'tis the one sure way in which charity wages war with sin and pauperism.

You may ask, perhaps, what is Charity. To define this word is one of the most difficult things imaginable. It is so broad that no concise meaning can be found for the modern use of the term. The word itself means "love." In the ages which came and went, after the Great Master ascended, the word lost its beautiful fundamental meaning and became debased to "almsgiving." Those of you who are familiar with the revised edition of the New Testament, will remember how completely the word "charity" has disappeared from its pages and the word "love" taken its place.

What Charity, that trust left us by the Most Compassionate One, is to Christianity, Liberality was to Paganism; but Charity and Liberality are as widely separated from each other as Christianity from Paganism. Charity gives to alleviate a man's distress, to lessen his great need, but Liberality gave for the sake of display, or for gaining some office or high honor. Let us now take a look at the great world before the birth of Charity, before Christianity came.

In Athens, we find Liberality most flourishing, since, by nature, the Greeks were more benevolent than the Romans. It was at Athens that the nearest approach to a systematic relief of the poor was made. Those, who through bodily weakness or infirmity could not earn their own livelihood, were relieved by the State. The State also brought up, at its own expense, the orphans of citizens who had fallen in war, maintaining and training them until they were eighteen years of age, then dismissing them fully equipped.

Later, Athens became corrupt, the State money was distributed, in the form of bribes, among the rabble; work was neglected and the Athenians fell lower in both economy and morals.

In Rome, the same method of distribution was employed, only on a very much larger scale. While in Athens the money exacted from the allies was somewhat small, in Rome "the spoils of a conquered world were given to the people in the form of money, banquets, and theatrical displays."

The free distribution of corn was another evil in Rome, in fact one of the greatest, since by it was the number of poor citizens increased, honest labor destroyed, and the people themselves weakened morally and physically.

There was one institution, however, among the Romans, the endowments for the education of poor children, which deserves commendation, though founded not through charitable but political motives. The capital set apart for this purpose was invested at a moderate rate of interest, and the income maintained and educated boys and girls, chiefly those free-born. There is surely some ground for believing they were founded from motives of humanity, as well as political reasons, since girls, also, shared in the privileges.

Under the law of Israel, "whose God was the only true God," we find no actual system of poor relief. There never was, and never could be, much poverty among the Israelites, for the reason that they lived plainly and respected work as a duty imposed upon every man by God. There were poor in Israel, of course, but their condition was much improved by several good laws. "The olive tree was not twice shaken, nor the vineyard twice gathered, nor the sheaves of corn, left by the gleaners, to be gathered up—all that belonged to the poor. All debts, also, were released in the seventh year." The Jews were merciful but not charitable, they were liberal in almsgiving but not ostentatious about it. Still, as now, beggary was unknown among them. The Emperor Julian certifies to the fact that, amongst the Jews of his time, there were no beggars. Yet even to the Children of Israel, the divine Charity of Christ came as a revelation.

Tracing the history of charity methods through the early years of the Christian church, we find that the early Christians gave, not only of their abundance, but also of themselves, their time and personal labor; such charity was always accompanied by great self-sacrifice.

"Almsgiving had then nothing of that weak humanity, as apparent in later times." To the poor, necessities only were given, and all cultivated a life of simplicity. Willingly did those early Christians open their doors to receive the sick, the orphan and the stranger.

At first the relief of the poor was congregational, but, "during the Middle Ages, hospitals and monasteries became the distributing points of a charity which resolved itself into a wholesale almsgiving." In the beginning Charity was crowned with an ample blessing, since "in the Christian Church there were actually no beggars and none suffered want."

But almsgiving brought a curse upon the Church of later days. Beggars were produced by the wholesale; they fairly swarmed around the doors of the monasteries and churches. And the monks encouraged them; for "they reckoned their treasures in Heaven by the number of beggars daily fed on earth."

Yet a day of disaster followed because of that vast system of indiscriminate almsgiving. Nowhere was the fall of Monasticism attended with greater misery than in England, for it turned out upon the world those destitute of means and without ability to work. In 1601, the first poor law was passed. Under this law each parish took care of the disabled and forced the able-bodied to work. This law relieved the distress prevalent at the time, and forms the basis of the present English poor law.

Now let us consider the great works and reforms which charity has accomplished in this present century.

First in England, our Mother Country, we find that early in this century, the jails, "those schools of crime," were purified of their abuses, that the laws for debtors were improved, that the white slaves—the poor oppressed women and little children of Great Britain—were released from their terrible life in the crowded factories under the tyranny of brutal masters.

Since 1870 there have been established all over England, common schools known as "Board Schools," attendance upon which is made compulsory. There have been established free libraries, reading rooms, and art-galleries; sanitary matters have been regulated; hospitals, charitable associations and trained nurses provided for the sick and suffering poor.

To give a brief account of the modern charity methods in America would be impossible. But let us consider a few of the leading, the most successful methods. In 1872 the State Charities Aid Association was established Its plan grew out of the thoughts, experiences and benevolent purposes of one woman, Miss Louisa Lee Schuyler.

The object of the society is two-fold: to encourage interest in the New York State charity institutions, and to make the present pauper system more efficient, reforming it in accordance with the most enlightened views of Christianity, science and philanthropy. It was through the efforts of this organization that Bellevue is now the admirable institution it is. Nor did the society confine its labors to New York city alone, but spread out over the whole State, co-operating with other charitable associations already formed. Well does it carry on its work and prove itself worthy of the motto chosen for it, "Not alms, but a friend."

There are other institutions doing excellent work. Each summer brings to us reports of the different Fresh Air Societies and the Floating Hospitals. Year after year we read of the many homeless children who have been sent from New York to good pure homes in the great West, where they may grow up to be worthy citizens.

All over our great Union there are scattered institutions of aid: the People's Palace of Jersey City, the Boffin's Bower of Boston, the Wayfarer's Lodge of the same place, the great Public Baths, the recent College Settlements and thousands of other societies, private and public, large and small, everywhere.

Although the Jew will not believe in Christ, still he is one most diligent in doing deeds of charity. The Baron de Hirsch is the central figure in the movement for liberating the oppressed Jews in Russia. He offered ten million dollars a month for the relief of emigrants from Russia and Roumania to the United States. The main object of this fund is education—to educate these foreigners in agricultural and mechanical arts.

So I might continue and tell you more yet of the wonderful methods which modern charity employs. The aim today is to develop self-respect in the needy one, to aid him by personal friendship, by indirect rather than by direct assistance.

Charity ever grows broader; methods will change and former needs pass away, but charity itself will ever remain, for "the poor we have always with us."

"The old order changeth, yielding place to new,
And God fulfills himself in many ways."

The spirit of true charity says today:

"The Holy Supper is kept indeed
In whatso we share with another's need;
Not what we give, but what we share,
For the gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three,
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and Me."

"An Oriental Pole" was rendered by the orchestra, after which President Probasco said that when the time came for the Board of Education to select a speaker for the commencement exercises, they decided to invite Dr. Raymond. In response to their letter of invitation he wrote that although he had declined several similar invitations he would accept this one. Dr. Probasco introduced Mr. Raymond as "one who Plainfielders had always loved and always would love."

Dr. Raymond was greeted with enthusiastic applause and spoke substantially as follows:

He said he could never forget the six years of residence and work in this city, and he was especially pleased to be here at this time in view of the fact that he was now engaged in an educational line of work as President of Union College. The large attendance at the exercises was a tribute to the class, which represented achievement, for this is what the world appreciates now. Remembering that the class stood as a representative of the public schools, he spoke of education as of value to the world. The high school, he said, was constantly developing and pointing out the direction the nation is taking and it is only a step from the high school to the college.

One of the beneficient things of education is the recognition of the right of women to the best the world affords. Every year the interests of women are becoming more closely identified with those of the commonwealth. Education gives man a dignity and tends to bring out things that would be otherwise undeveloped, for the educated man is blessed with keener appreciation and more liberal ideas. Not until we can appreciate the building up of man can we appreciate the value of education. The influence of education passes the mark of scholarly faces, and reaches out and benefits the whole community.

Popular government based upon personal liberty is constantly involving intricate and responsible questions, as is evidenced in this country today. The government is in the hands of a few. In America the people do not govern so much through the leaders as the leaders do through the people. Every great moral reform has been gained through a change of leaders. We are trained to look upon these in whom we have confidence, and therefore the great need of a government to have intelligent people who are able to decide about the proper public policy without leadership. This is where education is needed to bring the people up to this standard of being able to recognize without being lead. One potent influence in government at present is the desire to make money. As a nation we have been developing our material success. Political leadership has fallen into the hands of men who succeed in business. But it is not always the best business men that make the best law makers. In the progress of making money a man must necessarily put his own interests before others. But in public life it is different. Officials should put the peoples' side first. It is not easy, though, to change the methods of a man's life, and the probabilities are that he will continue the same policy in his public capacity that he does in his private life. This merely develops men to look a little way into questions. Men are needed who can go through, expose and answer fallicious arguments. What is wanted then, is men who can appreciate the eternal rights of principles, for the public are prone at first to support superficial theories.

When men dwell together in the unity of the spirit they will dwell together in success and peace. All great reforms are agitated around a great question which is individual liberty. However, the best thought of the nation is not what emphazises individual liberty so much as obligation. Every great force needs to be governed by intelligence. If the mission of education is to better the world I admonish you to further fit yourself along these lines.

The oration and valedictory was made by Thomas Dezelle Blair "On The Value of a Classical Education," and was as follows:

The most distinguished professional men bear witness with an overwhelming authority in favor of a course of education in which the training of the mind shall be the first object and the storing of information the second.

So said Gladstone after he had taken time to reflect upon his own education. From his statement we know not whether he holds in mind a classical or scientific course, but anyone familiar with the life of this English statesman will remember that he was especially brilliant in Latin verse composition. At the same time we find him locked in his room pouring over the great classics of Homer. So without a doubt Gladstone here refers to a course founded at least upon classical study. Surely such a course has well trained and informed his mind, for he has long ranked as the most sagacious and far-sighted statesman in all England; and statecraft requires great wisdom and ability.

In order to train the mind a study must possess disciplinary power. In this respect the classics are unexcelled. They are of such complexity that all the mental powers must be concentrated in the effort of mastery or nothing will be accomplished. Wonderfully complete they are too in their structure. Language is the medium of communication between man and man; to express the thought exactly, the medium must be very clear and distinct—a principal thoroughly embodied by the Greeks in the structure of their marvelous language.

But why are not modern languages as effective as the ancient for discipline? All modern languages are second-hand. To understand anything completely one should examine the root as well as the branches. So, with modern languages, an accurate understanding is greatly assisted by a previous acquaintance with those great sources of language—the Greek and the Latin. When once the classics have been mastered a modern derivative language may not only be readily acquired, but appreciated.

Some would insist upon a scientific to the exclusion of a classical course. But upon what is scientific language based? Why, upon the Greek and Latin, as every word of science plainly shows. The English language does not possess that rare ability which the Latin and Greek have—the ability to combine two and sometimes three words together to form a new word with a double or triple meaning. In fact the German is the only modern language capable of this operation. So, for scientific nomenclature, we borrow from the ancients. Therefore to thoroughly understand the language of science one must be pretty well acquainted with the classics. Without them the words which clothe the thought fall flat and have but a vague significance; with them the subject is thoroughly understood and enjoyed.

Observe the benefit derived from a single lesson in Greek or Latin. The student has been assigned his task and is beginning it. First, he considers the inflectional form of each word; then he finds the meaning, choosing carefully and holding in mind the idea of the author; last comes the translation, which in poetry requires language most beautiful and expressive, in oratorical prose words most forcible and vigorous. Further, questions in mythology or geography may arise. Thus, we find the powers of observation, memory and judgment brought into play together.

Now that the mind has been trained let us see how it is stocked. Herein lies the greatest value of the classics. Look to literature. Its masterpieces find their origin in Greek. There poetry reached its perfection. Read and compare an epic poem of today with the Iliad or Aeneid. The style is unchanged. Why is it? It is because the Greeks developed the style to such a point of perfection that no better could be employed. To reach such an ideal meant years of hard, honest, painstaking labor, beginning with ballads and ditties, advancing steadily and at last reaching the grand, sublime poems, which by dint of good fortune we possess at the present day. In all that the Greeks attempted they seemed to excel. Although without examples, with no resources from which to draw, yet all their works of art are models at the present time and have never been surpassed. Their imagination was given full play.

In the tone of their literature there is such distinctness and freshness of thought that it has the special charm of originality, while modern literature is so thoroughly saturated with the ideas of the ancient that it seems like a mere reproduction. The characters of mythology hold such a prominent position in all literature that it is difficult to read intelligently without having first studied the classics. For these various reasons the works of Greece and of Rome are worthy of consideration until the time when the structure of literature may be built upon other foundations.

But why cannot the same result be gained by reading translations? In the first place the discipline obtained by the study of language immediately disappears; besides a vast amount of good there is a certain amount of satisfaction gained by "digging out" a translation for oneself; secondly, we are reading one man's ideas in another man's words; and further we are very often reading altogether different ideas.

Yet in spite of their unexcelled disciplinary and literary values, there has been a decline in the study of classics. It was necessary and inevitable. A hundred years ago there was little or no classification of scientific facts, but meanwhile the scientific world has been wonderfully disclosed. The change has been gradual. As scientific truth was discovered the cause of science found warm advocates. Many regarded science as a surer road to wealth—an idea which is quite prevalent at the present day. As though man's chief end were to acquire wealth and in so doing to sacrifice breadth and fulness and richness of life—to sacrifice the training and discipline of those mental faculties with which he has been endowed! Not to say that science does not discipline the mind, but it leaves largely undeveloped that power of exact discrimination between words, which, by custom, have grown almost synonomous; it does not bring one in contact with that wealth of imagination, fancy and inspiration which abounds in the classics. Nevertheless, the new study has steadily grown in favor till it holds a footing on an equality with the classics.

The majority of the supporters of each course are fully confident that the triumph will be theirs in the end, yet those less prejudiced are manifesting a conviction that a combination of the two courses will produce the more thorough education. In fact, science and literature are so closely allied that they are wholly inseparable. What would poetry be without nature? How soon it loses its hold upon our interests when nature is overlooked! The best poet—that is the one who delights us most and whose impressions are the most lasting—is he who is the greatest lover of nature. On the other hand, how quickly science becomes dry and uninteresting, unless it be written in such language as to hold the reader! So while science has grown into a position of acknowledged importance in the educational world of the present time, yet science without the culture of the classics is crude and unfinished. Today that man is well educated who has laid a solid foundation of classical culture and has not neglected to strengthen in with the massive materials of scientific truth.

VALEDICTORY.

Gentlemen of the Board of Education, in the name of the Class of '95, I thank you for what you have done in holding high the standard of the Plainfield High School. In bidding you farewell, we take this opportunity to express our gratitude, a gratitude which will deepen as the years increase.

And, in parting with you, teachers of the Plainfield High School, the Class of '95 sincerely thanks you for your long labors of patience, you have been the instruments of our education. In education, as in manufacture, the result depends as largely upon the tools as upon the material worked. For all that you have been us we thank you.

My dear classmates, tonight we are about to enter upon a new era of life, the importance of which we cannot now realize. In one respect it is similar to that one from which we are departing, it will be what we make it. We have completed four tedious years of experience; let us forget that of the past which may be unpleasant, and look only to the future; let us make this new epoch a grand success by doing our very best in the little things. We are about to be thrown out upon the world which has often been called a hard master, yet many have braved the storms, and afterward sailed into the sunshine of success. What these have done, we may do.

Together we have toiled in geometry; some of us have found great pleasure in the study of astronomy and geology, while others have taken delight in Greek and Latin. There have been times when certain passages were difficult, when problems were hard, but such times only prepared us for the more difficult, and we ever remembered that every cloud has its silver lining, which appears the brighter in proportion to its greater degree of darkness.

Tonight we meet together for the last time; some of us enter upon business life which is ever open for the energetic and ambitious; others will extend their education by study at college. In either case if we are true to the best that is in us, we will be true to others, and so as we bid each other farewell, my parting words to each member of the Class of '95 are: Be true to yourself.

The exercises were concluded with the presentation of diplomas by President Probasco, who addressed a few appropriate words to the class.

A KICKING HORSE.

Broke the Fence Down and Then Took a Base Ball Slide.

A horse belonging to John Beekman of East Third street, was severely injured last night. Mr. Beekman brought the horse from the barn and tied him to the fence. He then prepared a quantity of flaxseed to poultice the animal's hind feet. Just as he neared the horse the feet went in the air and a kicking time resulted A lage portion of the fence was torn away and the horse ran out the driveway at a lively gait. When he reached the sidewalk he slipped on some boards and made a base ball slide across the street to the gutter on the opposite side. A portion of the rail from the fence still hung to the halter strap, and as hs ran down the street toward Watchung avenue this rail kept striking him on the forelegs. After much difficulty the animal was caught on Watchung avenue and brought home.

Dr. Herbert was called and found it necessary to take several stitches in a deep cut in the left fore leg, which was a result of the accident.

A BLOOMER RIDER.

She Varies the Sex of the Blue Ribbon Century Run.

The Blue Ribbon Century run of the Manhattan Bicycle Club of New York left West Forty-second street, New York, this morning, passing through Weehawken, Rutherford, Newark, Elizabeth, Cranford, Westfield and Plainfield. They arrived here about 9:40, and were not making fast time. The party included about thirty-five cyclers, and among them was one woman in bloomers. As they passed through Park avenue a crowd of sympathizing wheelmen were stationed at the corner of Fourth street and cheered the riders on. It seemed to give them new life and vigor, for some of them looked awful tired.

John Rickert and Frank Smith, of the Cresent Wheelmen, were among the riders and held front positions. The party stopped at Campbell's club house for a few minutes, after which they continued their journey going to Metuchen, New Brunswick, Princeton, Trenton, Bristol, and Broad street, Philadelphia. On the return they leave the Quaker City tomorrow morning at 5:45, retracing the same route. While in Philadelphia they will be the guests of the Century Wheelmen.

The Central Will Do Their Share.

Chairman V. W. Nash of the Fourth of July committee sent Andrew E. Kenney to New York yesterday to interview H. P. Baldwin, of the Central Railroad, with regard to decorating the North Avenue station on the Fourth. Mr. Baldwin gave Mr. Kenney assurance that the company would do their share to make the day a success.

Tennis Tournament.

The Hillside Tennis Club will hold a tournament, gentlemen's singles, open to club members, on the courts of the club, on July Fourth. Play will commence at ten a. m. Entries will close on Tuesday, July 3d. The committee who are arranging the event is: Howard W. Beebe, Henry D. West, E. Dean Ryder, George P. Mellick.

JUST TO PLEASE HER

INCIDENTALLY TO ADD TO THE ATTRACTIVENESS OF HER BEAUTY.

Dress Does It If Cut in the Proper Manner and From Becoming Fabrics. Some Fetching Ideas that May Help Out in the Hot Weather.

"I want," said the summer girl to herself, "a gown that I can wear upon a variety of occasions—one not to elaborate for the street and yet appropriate for house wear." And fashion straightaway devised the costume.

The illustrated costume is decidedly chic both in color and cut, and is designed for out of door service. It is of a soft wool material of an odd shade of light blue, and is relieved by black and white. The godet skirt is banded about the lower edge with three narrow folds of the blue material. The corsage has a narrow vest of white cloth, ornamented with four big gilt buttons, the turnover collar being also of the white. The puffs forming the upper part of the sleeves have on the under side an inserted piece of cloth laid in folds corresponding with the bands on the skirt. The entire sleeve is of the blue, and the close fitting cuff fastens at the wrist with four small gilt buttons. The black appears in broad satin ribbon, a twisted breadth of which is drawn across the bodice front at the waist line, belt fashion, ending on either side in a lengthwise bow. In the back the bodice flares out in an abbreviated skirt, edged all about with the black satin. The light yellow straw bonnet worn with this gown is of the popular sharp pointed, brimless species, and has pink roses and a black aigrette by way of trimming.

The inevitable crepon appears in the second costume. This time it is brown in color, and the pattern confines itself to the simple wave. Except for the large scallops about the lower edge formed by the godet plaits the skirts is entirely plain. At the waist line there is a graceful zone, double pointed in the front and having big loops in the back that extend, earwise, at the sides. The zone is of bright blue miroir velvet edged with bronze passementerie over paler blue satin. Velvet also forms the bodice yoke, which is deeply slashed along the lower edge. Lengthwise bands of the passementerie extend from the yoke slashes to the zone, and in between is finely plaited brown chiffon. The sleeves hang in big balloons of the crepon from shoulder to elbow, the upper point of a deep buff of the velvet inserting the puffs at the elbow. The puffs are finished off with the illuminated passementerie. The collar is of the velvet with loops at the back. The broad brimmed peaked crown hat is of brown straw faced with the velvet. It is ornamented with pale blue plumes.

From the present indications, orchids and irises are the coming flowers in millinery. One thing may be said in their favor, that cheap imitations will not interfere with their popularity. An orchid, particularly one of the small, rare varieties, is not an easy flower to imitate, and to do so in cheap material and by unskilled hands is simply impossible.

Then give us a candidate for governor.—Newark Times-Standard.

We have got material enough to give you a dozen, if necessary. But, unfortunately, it is not going to prove necessary from the standpoint of the political powers.

Editor Kingdon of the Mount Holly News has been writing sarcastic editorials about Assemblyman M.E. Matblack, of Burlington county. This has aroused the ire of the legislator, who has shaken his finger in the true Georgiawiscian style under the editor's nose and threatened to cowhide him. The action of the Assemblyman is accounted for by the fact that he is young in public life.

"Plainfield is the best governed city in New Jersey," says the Plainfield Press; and in view of the fact that the city government is almost unanimously Republican, while the Plainfield Press is Democratic, such a statement is as creditable as it is significant.—Elizabeth Journal.

The Journal man should remember that The Press is an independent paper, though it is no discredit to be a Democrat. But it is better to have things correct, you know.

The Passaic county grand jury refrained from presenting an indictment for Sunday ball playing, but made a presentment against a small band of Salvation Army worshipers who, it is alleged, make more noise than is necessary. Grand juries sometimes do queer things now-a-days, and this instance is about the queerest that has has been made public.

City Attorney Connolly, of Elizabeth, last night informed the Excise Board that every license application must have the names of twelve freeholders as signers; none of whom had signed any other application in a year. This decision caused consternation to many liquor dealers, who, owing to the warfare against them by the Good Citizenship Union, are unable to get the requisite signers.

It is all well enough to jest about the ideal, theoretical and cloud-scraping essays of the graduates, but the fact cannot be disguised that the subjects discussed by the High School graduates last night abounded in practical ideas and conclusions that were only attained by the writers after earnest research and the application of logical arguments. But to apply these principles to a cold, unsympathizing world is quite another thing.

The grass in the city park needs cutting.—Courier-News.

What might be made a handsome plot of ground and pleasant recreation spot, the "park" is now an eyesore to the section of the city of which it is a part. The Common Council ought to see its way clear to appropriate a small sum of money to place it in condition so as to be of some practical benefit to the city.

The Common Council of Elizabeth have ordained that the bicycle riders of that city must carry lanterns on their wheels when riding in the streets after dusk. Judging from news reports sent out from Elizabeth and from an editorial published in last night's Journal the ordinance is not received with very much favor by the riders, for they are now demanding that all vehicles be compelled to carry lights after dusk. Such agitation as this displays somewhat of a vindictative spirit on the part of the wheelmen rather than the graceful acceptance of the provisions of the ordinance that should characterize their actions. It is ridiculous to demand or to argue that a vehicle drawn by a single horse or team should be compelled to carry lights because bicycles are. There is no comparison as to the relative danger to pedestrians of a noiseless bicycle and a vehicle drawn by horses, whether it be a buggy or a lumbering dray.

Dr. Mary D. Hussey's unpleasant experience on a railroad train last week with a beast who bore the semblance and wore the clothing of a gentleman is one that is of entirely too frequent occurrence in public conveyances and in public places, and she is entitled to the thanks of her sisters for making such a determined effort to secure the fellow's punishment. It is unfortunate that the average woman when thus insulted prefers to appear unconscious of it, dreading the unpleasant publicity which an attempt to secure the punishment of the offender would necessitate, and the fellows that indulge in such rascally practices are emboldened to indulge in them by that very sentiment. The Newark authorities and the daily papers in their publications in regard to the matter seem to have united to make the case as unpleasant for the complainant as possible, while shielding the defendant by discharging him from custody and concealing his name. We admire Dr. Hussey's spunk, and believe that every right minded man and woman in the community will wish her success in the effort to secure the punishment of the offender and the protection of her sex.—East Orange Gazette.

The twenty-second annual report of the State Board of Agriculture has just been issued. F. E. Woodruff, in his report from Union county, makes the suggestion that every owner of a bicycle in the county pay an annual tax of $1, the money so derived being expended on the roads. This portion of the report is as follows:

> The enormous strides the use of the bicycle has made in popular esteem is another outgrowth, in large part, of the county-road system. No figures are at hand, but the number of bicycles owned in this county alone must be many thousands. The wheelmen have been among the most enthusiastic supporters of the sentiment for county roads, and although they have the use, almost the monopoly, at times, of the roads, and the full protection of the law in their rights on the highway—for the bicycle is no longer regarded as a plaything, but by decision of the courts a vehicle, and entitled to the same privileges and right of way—it is believed that not one per cent. of the wheels are ever represented on the Assessors' books.
>
> It is suggested that this large and increasing amount of personal property now not taxed should pay its share toward the support of the county, and that this could best be accomplished by a uniform assessment of say $1 per year for each bicycle, the money so collected to be expended for repairs to the county roads.
>
> Certainly no fair-minded person could object to such a tax, and it would answer the question of how to reach this class of property, that is gradually assuming more and more importance.

The State Board of Education has about completed the work of apportioning to the different counties the money which will be received from the State for the support of the public schools for the year beginning July 1, 1895. The total amount to be apportioned is $2,396,240 as against $2,219,360 for the year just closing. This $2,396,240 includes the $200,000 special appropriation which, under Senator Stokes's bill, is taken from the proceeds of the invested State school funds and divided among the different counties on a basis of the last school census. The remainder of the $2,396,240 is the State school tax, which is collected direct from the taxpayers, and which equals yearly $5 for every child of school age as shown by the latest school census. Ninety per cent. of the amount thus collected goes to the county in which it was collected, and the balance of 10 per cent. goes into a reserve fund which is distributed with regard to the peculiar condition existing in the different counties; such as low or high ratables in proportion to the school population, or a sparsely or densely settled county where a greater or lesser number of teachers and schools are required than in the other counties. Union county's share from the State school tax is $98,192.61, and from the $200,000 appropriation $8,902.49, making a total of $107,095.10. Somerset county's share from the State school tax is $46,730.11, and from the $200,000 appropriation $3,375.33, making a total of $50,105.47. The money which the State Board of Education will apportion will be re-apportioned by the county superintendends to the various school districts within their counties, under the school law of 1894, on a basis of, first, $200 for each teacher employed, and, second, the remainder to be distributed in proportion to the school census in each district.

EVIDENCE OF GOOD GOVERNMENT.

The completion of the enumeration of the inhabitants of this city shows a wonderful growth in the last decade. In 1885 the population was 8,913 and the census just finished gives the city 13,629, outside of the borough, which is an increase of 4,716 in ten years. In 1890 the population was 11,267, an increase of 38.67 per cent over the population of 1880. Plainfield is now raised from a third-class to a second-class city, and will receive many benefits therefrom in the way of municipal government.

Though the figures of the borough enumeration have not yet been given out, it is safe to say that their increase in population is proportionately as large as in the city, which will approximate 6,000, thus giving a combined population of about 20,000.

This growth has not been attained by the booming process, which has made big towns grow small in less time than they grew large, but has been of a steady and substantial character. The primary cause is, of course, the natural and extremely desirable advantages of Plainfield as a place of residence; but secondarily, the reputation which both the city and borough officials have for conducting the local government in a clean, practical and economical manner are forces which have materially contributed to making Plainfield what it is. What it will be in the future naturally depends, to a great extent, on these same conditions prevailing.

Judging from past records, and there is every reason to believe that fully as creditable ones will continue to prevail, Plainfield may look forward a decade, and see itself one of the leading cities of New Jersey in population as it is today in wealth, fashion and intelligence.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT.

Clap of Thunder Scares a Horse, Who Fractures a Lad's Collar-Bone.

A rather singular accident occurred to William Doud, a sixteen-year-old brother of Marshal Doud, on Monday afternoon during the heavy thunder storm. He was in the barn in the rear of his home on Duer street feeding the horse when a particularly loud clap of thunder frightened the horse and he gave a lunge sideways, with the result of throwing himself against the young lad and breaking the boy's collar-bone. Dr. Adams was called and reduced the fracture.

Charles Frey, of Plainfield avenue, was arrested yesterday by Sergeant Kiely. He was charged by George Eddy, the West End butcher, of obtaining money under false pretenses. The sergeant took him before Justice Nash, and the latter, after hearing his story, decided to adjourn the matter for one week, in order to give him an opportunity to settle with Mr. Eddy.

PRESIDENTAL PRESENT

[illegible] Cleveland Will Receive a Gift [illegible]

President Cleveland has had gifts and honors bestowed upon him in great numbers, but its dollars to doughnuts that the gift he will receive from Plainfield in a few days will please him better than to have a dozen crying babies named after him. It is a well-known fact—in truth so well known that it is almost superflous to mention it—that the President is a latter day Izak Walton, whose piscatorial expeditions will go thundering down time into future ages with as much renown as did the trip of Washington across the raging Delaware.

This particular gift which the President will receive from Plainfield is a fishing rod, which, figuratively speaking, would make Sam Wilbur's mouth water. The donor will be A. F. Marsh, of 25 Vine street, who has been working on the article for some time past. It is made of seasoned split hickory, is ten feet long, divided into three sections, and weighs twelve ounces. In a word, it is a beautiful piece of work.

Mr. Marsh will send it to the President one day this week, previous to which it will be on exhibition in Schwed's display window on Front street.

MR. TAYNOR AND THE BEES.

A large swarm of bees had located around a tree in front of the house near the sidewalk, and Mr. Taynor thought it would be nice to capture them in a box, and so he dressed accordingly and attempted to drive them in a large box. The bees did not seem to like the idea, and so they gave Mr. Taynor a very lively chase. He finally became so heated that he was obliged to give up, and had the satisfaction of seeing them fly away across a large field.

Mr. Taynor attracted considerable attention with a mosquito netting over his head, as he was following up the bees.

Codding Conferring With Party Leaders.

Assemblyman Codding, who is busily engaged in working up the boom for Senator Foster M. Assemblyman Codding also conferred with County Clerk Howard and others of the party leaders while in the city.

Saved Mrs. Rennie's Life.

Mrs. Jennie Rennie of Virgil, N. Y., had been sick for a year or more with overflow of the gall and ulcers of the stomach. Her physician told her she could not live. Mrs. Rennie's mother had found such benefit from the use of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, that she persuaded her daughter to use it, which she did, with the result that it cured her of these diseases and she says she was never as well as now.

THE BROWNS ARE PLAYERS.

THE WOODBRIDGE AGGREGATION DEFEAT THE Y. M. C. A. TEAM.

Bangup Game of Ball on the Crescent Oval Saturday—Plainfield Scores Five Runs in the Ninth Inning.

It did not rain Saturday afternoon, neither did the Y. M. C. A. base ball nine win, but the cranks who attended the game enjoyed it, and in the last inning had a chance to root like "ye olden times." Nearly a hundred were present to see the Woodbridge Browns defeat the home team seven to five in a game nearly errorless on the part of the Plainfield boys, and only won by the manifestly superior playing of the famous Brown brothers. McLaughlin pitched for Plainfield for the first five innings and at the first ball delivered threw his arm out. This hampered him and thus enabled the Browns to roll up a higher score than they otherwise would. Fearing a permanent strain, Burt was placed in the box, while Mac guarded first base.

Tall Dave Brown had splendid control of the ball, and although he was but fairly well yet the hits were never bunched. In the second inning two hits by Schoonmaker and Davis excited the cranks, but Egan knocked an easy fly to first, who made a double single handed.

Up to the eighth Brown's up-shoot seemed to puzzle the Y. M. C. A. boys, but Freeman at last found what he was looking for and sent the ball chasing down towards Denton's nursery while he sprinted around to third. A run seemed sure, but Davis struck out and then Egan hit an easy grounder to the short stop. Freeman started for the home plate but was touched out when the catcher threw to first in time to put out Egan.

The fun began in the ninth, however. Burt made a pretty hit and reached first safely. Dupee went out on a fly to centre. Townley put another fly in the hands of the centre fielder who dropped it. McLaughlin did the same to the left fielder who was rattled; also allowing Burt to cross the plate amid the cheers of the crowd. More errors brought in both Townley and McLaughlin, while Schoonmaker and Freeman aided by reaching first on balls and the badly rattled outfield ran around the bases and added two more runs to the score. Davis had followed in their footsteps as far as second where he managed to upset the famous Charley Brown who attempted to put him out, but the third out was made by an easy grounder by Egan who was fielded out at first. This ended the game which, considering the strength of the visiting team, was a very creditable showing for the Y. M. C. A. nine.

J. Hervey Doane and Van R. Schuyler acted as umpires.

Woodbridge	1	2	0	3	0	0	1	0	x—7

PLAYED AND DINED.

Pleasant Saturday Event of the Hillside Tennis Club.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather Saturday afternoon their was not a very large gathering of people at the Hillside Tennis Club grounds. The final match game between R. T. Nevins and H. H. Hollister of the Rutherford Club, and Fred Fish and C. F. Walz of the home club, was of course the interesting feature. The playing was very good. The scores were 6-1, 6-1, 6-3, in favor of the home members.

An interesting game was played afterward between Messrs. Nevins and Hollister, and Dr. Richards and C. F. Walz.

Tea was then served in the clubhouse. Miss Phoebe Lovell poured the tea and was assisted by Misses Edith Gilbert and Gertrude Walz.

Costly Sparks Will Fill the Air.

The contract for the fireworks to be used the evening of the Fourth of July will be given out this evening. The display will probably not cost less than $500, and it will be the finest ever witnessed.

PUBLIC MONEY DIVIDED.

Apportionment of North Plainfield Borough and Township Funds.

The meeting to make a division of money held by the township of North Plainfield and the borough was held last evening in the North Plainfield Council rooms.

The money held by the township was raised by them and also the borough, and when the latter was set off this money was left in the township treasury.

Inasmuch as the borough people had paid their share into this fund it was necessary that they should receive their proportionate share of the surplus.

The meeting was thoroughly harmonious and the borough showed every disposition to allow the township everything they could possibly claim legally.

The cash on hand in the township treasury amounted to $2,105.02, of which the borough receives $1,869.63 and the township $235.39; of '94 tax money in the township collector's hands, $1,546.96, the borough gets $1,175.89 and the township $371.07; and of the tax money in his hands prior to '94, $217.99, the borough gets $184.55 and the township $33.44. The total amount received by the borough is $3,230.07, and the township $639.90.

There is $9,167.98 uncollected taxes, which is now due, and the borough will receive of this $8,142.86, and the township $1,025.12.

Borough Counsel C. A. Reed and Township Counsel W. R. Codington, together with the clerks and members of township and borough, were present at the settlement.

ARCANUMITES HAVE A GOOD TIME.

An Enjoyable Smoker Given By the Plainfield Lodge.

Yesterday was Arcanum Day throughout the State, and last night Royal Arcanum Lodge, No. 711, celebrated it in a fitting manner by giving a stag smoker and entertainment.

After the regular business was transacted the meeting was thrown open, and Dr. Rodman made one of his thoroughly enjoyable speeches. It dwelt on the social side of human nature, and told something of the order. Remarks by other members followed. Several selections were then rendered by an orchestra which was a feature.

J. VanEps, the Park avenue jeweler, pleased all by his fine playing on the zither.

There was an exceedingly large attendance and all enjoyed the refreshments and the good cigars.

Not as Far as He Thought.

The draw on the Newark bay bridge refused to close promptly Saturday afternoon and the 5:30 and other trains from New York were compelled to back down to Communipaw and go around by the New York and Newark branch. It was nearly two hours before the draw could be closed. Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, who was a passenger on one of the trains, fell asleep, and awakening near Brill's woods, thought that he was in Africa or some other foreign place, where the Courier told its readers he intended to sail for.

POLITICS IN UNION COUNTY.

A Lively Contest Between Kean and Voorhees.

The Newark Daily Advertiser yesterday published the following political gossip from Elizabeth:

There will be more politics in Union County this year, than ever before in its history, and Union has been a historic battlefield. While much of the trouble that the Union statesmen have on their hands is purely local, it all hinges on the figure that the county will cut in the Gubernatorial fight. Two "favorite sons" are prominent factors in the contest for the Republican nomination for Governor. They are John Kean, Jr., who was the standard-bearer three years ago, but was defeated by a largely reduced Democratic majority, and Senator Foster M. Voorhees, the present chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee.

Both men are close friends, and the active Republicans of the county are staying up nights trying to evade being committed to one side or the other. It is a happy, neighborly fight up to date, but everybody realizes that the campaign is young. On this brotherly fight, however, seems to depend the general drift of county politics.

Next to Governor, Union is interested in the Lay Judge fight now in the Appellate Court. Speaker Joseph Cross is thinking seriously of taking the nomination. The leading Republicans say that he can have it, but the Speaker is a very conservative man, and he will not come out boldly and say that he is a candidate, because he prefers to watch and see just how the cat is going to jump. He He does not anticipate that the Voorhees-Kean contest is going to involve the Republicans of Union county in a family row, but the Speaker has seen some queer things in politics, and prefers to wait.

The Democrats are also in a doubtful mood. Prosecutor Fred Marsh would not mind changing his place in the County Court House and sit on a bench, rather than standing in front of it making motions. The young Prosecutor is quoted by some of his near friends as thinking that if his old friend and companion, Foster M. Voorhees, is nominated, that Union won't cut much of a figure with Democratic majorities, when the returns come in, so he will continue to prosecute at the same old place. If Voorhees "don't go" with the convention then Marsh thinks a hip and a hurrah will carry the Democrats through and the Law Judge with it.

On the other hand, there are some Democrats not so speculative as the ex-Senator and they think that no local conditions should influence a candidate and that a man should take the nomination very much like a man takes a wife—"for better or worse,"—and the present Law Judge, Thomas F. McCormick, wants the renomination, and is willing to fight hard for election.

There is the same uncertainty about the Assembly delegation. It is said that both Codding and Burger would take a renomination, and that Codding would like to be the leader of the House, should he be returned, but the same "if and if" stands in the way of making any definite statement in this direction.

Water for the Thirsty.

The thirsty public who have occasion to pass by East Fourth street, near Watchung avenue, will find a choice supply of cool water, and they can thank Charles H. Hand for having the well driven, William J. Nelson for doing the work, Fred Maskey, the plumber, for placing a trough there for the convenience of horses, and J. P. Laire for furnishing the tin cups and chains. It will prove a great blessing to those who travel in that neighborhood.

The Big Land Sale.

J. F. MacDonald, the uptown grocer, will give you free tickets on the electric railway to attend Wm. E. Taylor's great auction sale of lots near Grant avenue depot next Saturday at two p. m. on the premises. There will be music at the sale and a large tent will be erected on the grounds in case of storm. Come and invest. You will surely make money. Terms $10 down on each lot and $5 per month thereafter.

ALL RIGHT FOR THE FOURTH.

The General Committee Find But Little Business to Transact.

There was very little business transacted at the meeting of the Fourth of July committee last evening in Red Men's Hall. The attendance was good and there were no signs of less interest and enthusiasm in the coming celebration. In fact, there was nothing special on the docket except the reports of the several committees to the executive committee, and they all reported progress.

The subscription committee stated that about $1,100 had thus far been realized.

A communication from Excelsior Hook and Ladder Company, of Scotch Plains, stated it would be impossible for the members to parade that day, but they would send the old hand engine to Plainfield to be used in the parade.

The motion made at the last meeting that the church bells be rung at midnight, sunrise, noon and sunset, was reconsidered last evening and after due consideration the ringing of the bells at midnight was omitted. The Daily Press unintentionally stated last week that J. W. A. Bauersachs was not in favor of ringing the bells, whereas he is heartily in favor of the idea.

The meeting then adjourned, and the several committees met and transacted all necessary business.

The executive committee decided to erect an arch over Park avenue at Front street, the same to cost $100. They also gave out the contract for fireworks to Stephen Dehart, of New Brunswick, and $100 was added to the proposed appropriation, which makes $600 in all.

PAINED AFTER FORTY YEARS.

Col. Diedrick Has An Operation Performed on One of His Fingers.

About forty years ago Col. John A. Diedrick was living in California and one day while climbing among some rocks he missed his footing and to save himself was obliged to cling to a small opening which he had previously noted.

In doing this he bruised the third finger on both of his hands. For a long time he suffered much pain, but it finally passed away and he thought no more about it till a short time ago, when the finger on his right hand began to double up and he was unable to open it. He had it treated, but no improvement was noticed.

Happening one day to hear of Dr. Sayre, of New York, who is a noted specialist, he had an interview with him and an appointment was made at Bellevue Hospital. The doctor operated on the finger before a large class of students, and it proved to be very successful. Mr. Diedrick hopes before long to be able to have the use of this member.

A strange part in connection with the circumstance is that the same finger on the other hand is effected in a like manner, and eventually a similar operation will be necessary.

Little Merry Makers.

Little Arthur Reed, son of Charles A. Reed, of Myrtle avenue, yesterday afternoon enjoyed himself when his mother gave him a birthday party. His companions in merriment were his sister, Madeline Reed, and Leslie Hallock, Ralph Hallock, George Evans, Douglass Waring, Reginald Roome, Willie Roome, Howard Roome, Clarence Roome, William Barlow, and Joe Osgood. Most of the time was spent in playing games, and later in the afternoon Mrs. Reed served dainty refreshments.

Drowned While Picking Lilies.

Ernest Polly was drowned yesterday while picking water lilies on a pond near Jamesburg. He was in a boat with two companions—Peter Johnson and William Bogert—when the accident happened. He was reaching out for a lily, when he lost his balance and fell into the water. He was unable to swim, and the two companions were so frightened that they were not able to offer any assistance. George Pearce, a colored man, saw the boy's hat floating on the water, and, after searching about half an hour, brought up the body.

From the Seat of Learning.

New Haven has long been famous as a seat of learning, and a graduate from Yale is looked upon as prepared for life's battles. Yesterday among the graduates from the Sheffield Scientific School, at Yale, was Clarence Peck, of Myrtle avenue, who after completing his three-year course with honor, was given his diploma. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Peck, his parents, went to New Haven to attend the commencement exercises, and all three are expected home today.

EFFECTIVE WORKERS.

Annual Report of the Young Women's Christian Temperance Union.

The annual report of Secretary Miss S. Lena Bass of the Y. W. C. T. U. is as follows:

The year '94-'95 has, on the whole, been a successful one. In addition to the devotional and business meetings, there has been held two parlor meetings—one at the residence of Mrs. Charles Potter, when Miss Addie Parker Jackson gave a most entertaining and instructive talk on Physical Culture, and another, a reception given at the residence of Miss Delphine Barnes, in honor of our former former president, Miss Amey Green.

In December a cake, pie, and candy sale was held, from which the receipts were $32. This sum, together with the money received from dues, etc., made the total receipts of the year, $71.78, while the disbursements were $67.91. Among the causes contributed to were the "Y" hospital bed, the Loyal Temperance Legion, subscription to a paper for the Public Library.

The superintendent of the Loyal Temperance Legion, Miss Delphine Barnes, makes the following report:

The first meeting was held October 10th, 1894, with ten children in attendance. From that time on a meeting has been held every Wednesday. One by one the children have been coming in, and today we have on our roll-book the names of seventy-seven children, forty-two girls and thirty-five boys. In all there has been held thirty meetings, with an average attendance of thirty. Every alternate Wednesday a temperance talk, with blackboard illustrations, has been given. The intervening Wednesday is the Band of Mercy meeting. Our object in this is to instruct the children "to be kind to all harmless living creatures, and try to protect them from cruel usage."

At Christmas each of the children received a box of candy, a bag of popcorn and an orange. In April the boys and girls enjoyed a very instructive blackboard talk given by Mrs. Blair. With the kind assistance of Miss Etta Blish and Miss Bessie Titsworth we have been enabled to carry on the work among the children, and we hope some words may have been spoken which may be of benefit to them.

Such has been the work of the year, and our prayer is that it may bring blessings to others and to ourselves.

RAISING CENTRAL'S TRACKS.

Work Begins in Elizabeth and May Be Completed Next Spring.

The work of elevating the New Jersey Central Railroad's tracks through Elizabeth on the main line and depressing five streets under the Central's roadbed began yesterday. There is considerable talk among the property owners on these streets over a report that the Central company will not erect any retaining walls against abutting property.

The story is that the company has discovered a law which will permit the work to be done without going to the extra expense of erecting the retaining walls. The property owners don't intend, if they can help it, to pay for this job, and declare they will fight the railroad company in the courts rather than submit. They claim the walls are called for by the contract made by the City Council with the railroad authorities.

The work of raising the Central's tracks and depressing the streets will take about nine months, and perhaps longer.

Coal Dealers on a Lark.

The coal dealers are not slow by any means, and as proof of this, the New Jersey Coal Dealers Exchange arranged an excursion for today which left Newark at 8:15. At 8:48 the train of the dealers in black diamonds pulled into the North Avenue station, where J. A. Thickstun, of this city, president of the Exchange, joined the party and escorted them as far as Bound Brook. The excursion will go to Gettysburg where a guide will lead them over the famous battle-field. The rest of the time will be spent in the Blue Mountains at the Blue Mountain House, from which they will return on June 27th.

A Novel Entertainment.

A novel and most enjoyable entertainment filled Bethel chapel to its utmost last evening. The occasion was a concert by a troupe of African singers. A colored boy only five years old played a number of selections on the piano and autoharp. The rest of the programme consisted of singing in English and Kaffer, and speaking and reciting in Kaffer. After the entertainment was concluded refreshments were served.

Many Plainfielders Will Go.

The festival to be held at Union Village Methodist church grounds on Wednesday evening of this week will doubtless draw a number of young people from this city and other places. It is just above Washingtonville and will prove a pleasant drive and a great pleasure in meeting old friends again.

A TRADES SCHOOL.

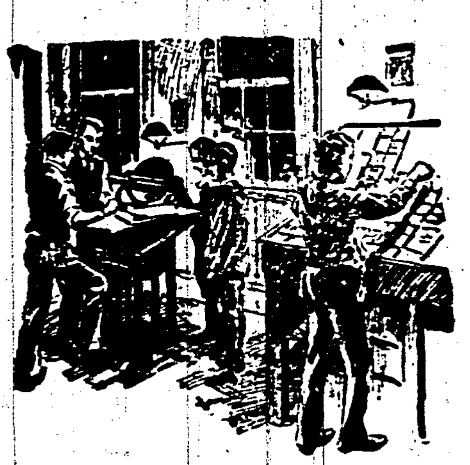
AN EPISCOPAL CHURCH DOES PRACTICAL WORK FOR BOYS.

Youths of St. George's College Instructed in Various Pursuits by Competent Masters. Carpenters, Printers, Plumbers and Telegraphers Display Their Skill.

The trade school of St. George's Protestant Episcopal parish, New York, is the successful evolution of an idea to keep youngsters out of mischief at night. It occurred to the rector of the church and his assistants about five years ago that it would be a good plan to arrange some form of entertainment that would attract a certain class of boys in the parish off the streets evenings. Word went forth that boys would be welcomed to the Memorial Building from seven to nine o'clock, and there in the basement the clergymen and others, who volunteered their services, gathered them together and told them stories, and read to them, and diverted them in other ways, both amusing and instructive.

From this arose th[illegible] Club of St. George's. The lads took readily enough to the amusement offered, and in their enthusiasm often tried to help matters along by getting up diversions on their own account, and it was not unusual for the person reading or story telling to be interrupted by the uproar of inpromptu wrestling matches suddenly entered upon by the more spirited lads.

Indeed, the Rev. Theodore Sedgwick, recently, referring to the early days of the club, said he never put a picture on the walls but somehow or other it was smashed before the end of a week, while the greatest pleasure of the boys seemed to be to pull down the chandelier so the gas would have to be turned off, the darkness giving a chance for rough and tumble sport. But the growing good influences of the club were apparent despite these frolics, and some of the wealthy men of the parish decided to enlarge its field of usefulness.



Only carpentry and drawing were attempted at first, but the plan met with success from the outset, and soon the other floors were taken, and plumbing, printing and telegraphy were added, and then manual training for the little chaps too small to try the trades, that their hands might be trained to use the tools when the time came to essay the higher branches.

Now two hundred and fifty boys work six nights a week in the school and as many more regret that lack of room deprives them of the benefits of the instruction given there. Many of the pupils are employed during the day, but gladly work at the trade school benches at night, that they may soon be able to earn an artisan's wages.

The instruction that they receive is of the best. The directors of all the classes are experts in their respective lines, and are paid to teach the boys. The carpentry class, which bends over the benches on the ground floor, is in charge of Mr. Miller, a cabinet maker who is in business for himself, and tables and desks and clothes horses and hatracks and various other products prove that his instruction has fallen on fertile minds. Mr. Tucker, a master plumber, imparts the secrets of his craft to aspirants who see visions of big fortunes in the near future, and the room in which they work is bright with joints and coils and connections, all done by the boys, and, as Mr. Tucker says, as well as any man could do them.

Eight cases of type, flanked by a hand press and "proving galley," give aspiring young printers a chance to see themselves in print, and Mr. Nilson, foreman of a big job office, gives the boys, as teacher, the benefit of his experience.

The printers are already a means of money saving to the parish. They do all the church printing, and every month get out St. George's Industrial Herald, a publication devoted to the interests of the school.

E. Wallace Kerr has the class in telegraphy, and he not only teaches them how to send and receive, but makes them run lines, make repairs, store the battery and take entire charge of all the electrical apparatus.

A. A. Hammerschlag, an electrical contractor, has charge of the drawing class, while the manual training school is under the direction of Mr. McNeil.

The Business Man and the Public.

The business man who knows the value of a steady customer does not hesitate to exhaust every means to obtain such a patron. The most potent force in bringing him is the newspaper. The successful man has a knack of making people remember where he is to be found when they happen to want something that he sells. Advertising of some kind is absolutely necessary to success. Every enterprising business man will tell you that simple truth. And the most effective is the announcement in the daily newspaper.

Encouraging Him.

A pupil whispered in the next boy's ear: "Our teacher is a regular duffer."

The master, who had just put a question to the whole class, thought the pupil was framing a reply, and said to him:

"Come, my lad, speak up, perhaps you are right."

FOR THE FRESH AIR FUND.

DELIGHTFUL FESTIVAL CONDUCTED BY BRIGHT LITTLE GIRLS.

A Craig Place Lawn Resplendent With Beauty of Fair Faces and Artistically Arranged Booths.

If the large number of children who are recipients of the blessings that are extended through the fresh air funds of New York could have taken a peep at the scene presented at 40 Craig place Thursday afternoon and evening their hearts would have jumped for joy and perhaps they would have realized more fully than ever how the money which sends them to the country is earned.

Loving little hearts and hands in the neighborhood had planned to raise money that they, too, might add it to the fund which gives the closely-confined children of the large cities an opportunity to see the green fields and enjoy a romp in the bright, clear sunshine of the country, over hill and dale that is luxuriant with fragrance and beauty, and so they got together and, with Tina Voehl as their leader, planned a fair to be given on the lawn of Mr. and Mrs. John Carney and Mr. and Mrs. David King's residence. It took days of work, but when they commenced the affair soon shaped itself into a reality.

There was the lemonade well built of stone, over which was an arrangement of greens and ferns, that made it a delightful spot to receive a glass of this cooling and refreshing beverage and then Hattie Messerschmidt and Nellie Vermeule, who were in charge, were so pleasant that it kept them busy looking after their many customers.

Near by was a candy booth, which was a perfect beauty. Here, too, greens and ferns had been put into excellent service, and the roof was artfully made by the little hands. At this place Addie Carney and Sadie Winckler held the attention of their customers, until they had secured some of their money.

In one corner of the yard was the fancy table, and a cozy place it was, all enclosed with a profusion of the prevailing articles, ferns and greens. And such a complete stock of fancy goods on sale was tempting enough to capture the money that Nellie Valiant, Mabel Stevens and Carrie Pangborn were successful in securing.

An attractive spot was the ice-cream booth. It was in the shape of a bower, and covered with cotton, it had an appearance of winter, which was in perfect hormony with the articles on sale. At this place Mamie Bogert, Bessie Valiant and Stella Swain served cream in a most satisfactory manner.

In another corner of the yard was placed the cake booth which was attractively made with greens and ferns. Ethel King and Addie Marsh had charge, and they knew just how to cut the cake so it would please everyone.

The whole scene was as pretty a picture as anyone would care to look at, and then the electric lights that were scattered here and there gave the place a very brilliant effect.

The waitresses, Maggie Fritz, Winnie Carroll, Mabel Wright, and Aggie Morse, all dressed in white, were always on duty and ready to serve their patrons.

There were also several Japanese lanterns hanging about the grounds, and a strip of red, white and blue bunting added much to the general effect,

Of course the little girls had help, but they deserve unlimited praise and credit for their undertaking.

To Mr. and Mrs. John Carney and Mr. and Mrs. David King, perhaps more than anyone else, is due the very picturesque scene presented, and they, assisted by Edward and Henry Sebring, put in the wires for lights, while the Electric Light Company very kindly gave the current.

Albert Vail also assisted materially. Mr. Tier was very kind in donating two gallons of ice cream, as was also John Morton, who gave enough ice to answer every purpose.

In the centre of the yard the girls had several tables that were prettily decorated with vines and cut flowers. In the afternoon the attendance was excellent and about $25 was cleared; in the evening the attendance increased very much. Everything was disposed of and the sum realized fully pays all for their labor.

Master Louie M. Hummer has the admiring glance of the young ladies as he glides through the streets of the city on his handsome new wheel.

Through the down town agency of J. Hervey Doane, Oscar S. Teale has purchased a Cleveland lady's wheel for his daughter, Miss Anna Teale.

In riding the ball of the foot only should cover the pedal, and the saddle should be so adjusted that when the pedal is at its lowest point the foot will rest firmly upon it.

We are are likely to have bicycle Derbys, bycycle St. Legers and bicycle Suburbans before long. The wheel is supplanting the horse everywhere, and bicycle racetracks abound. —Tribune.

LEAL'S SCHOOL CLOSES, TOO.

Y. M. C. A. HALL FILLED WITH FRIENDS OF THE INSTITUTION.

Prof. Fox of Johns Hopkins University Illustrates the Life of An English Student—The Graduates.

The Y. M. C. A. Hall was handsomely decorated last Friday to celebrate the closing exercises of John Leal's School.

After a few remarks by Mr. Leal to the graduates and lower classmen, George L. Fox, head master of the Johns Hopkins University, was introduced. Mr. Fox was a classmate of Mr. Leal at Yale. He held the attention of his audience through the first part of the evening with a description of the largest public schools in England, showing the difference between the English and the American public schools.

Later in the evening all the lights were turned off and the audience was carried, with the use of the stereopticon, on an imaginary journey through Rugby, Eaton and Clifton. Picture after picture was cast upon the wall showing the handsome buildings of the large schools. Many pictures brought before the eyes of the audience a very vivid view of the boat racing in England which is one of the greatest sports of the English school boy. Cricket is another of their favorite sports, and the audience was very much pleased to see some of the fields of England with the cricket team in white uniforms all in position.

Toward the later part of the evening Mr. Fox noticed that his time was nearly over, and when he spoke to Mr. Leal of closing, the audience broke forth in an enthusiastic applause, and Mr. Fox needed nothing else to convince him that he should not stop before he had exhausted his supply of pictures.

The lecture was very interesting as Mr. Fox has visited all the schools of England and took all the pictures with his own camera.

Fagging in England corresponds to hazing in America. When a boy first goes to school he becomes a fag and for the last two years he is a fag-master. The fags are required to do just whatever the fag-masters may command.

Mr. Fox once asked one of the English boys why he stood fagging as he could not find one American boy who would. The boy looked up at Mr. Fox and said, "Mr. Fox, what do you do with the American boys when they are awfully fresh?"

A little after ten o'clock the audience dispersed well pleased with their evening's entertainment, and feeling greatly instructed.

The graduating class was as follows: C. W. Abbott, H. M. Hall, L. A. Chase, J. F. Middleworth, George Bull, Lewis L. Thomas, Henry Talmadge, C. T. Walz, Stanley Hunter, E. F. Dorman, A. R. Sampson and Swan Hortwell.

Austin Corbin, who owns the new bicycle track at Manhattan Beach, has announced a scheme for the promotion of professional bicycle racing on the new track, and will offer purses aggregating $15,000 for a series of races to be run there this summer. Willis B. Troy has been selected to manage the track and has been clad with authority to deal with all the leading professionals in the world for races at the beach. It is proposed to open the professional season on July 20th and continue the meeting weekly until September 15th. In additional to professional events class A races will be run. Harry Wheeler, the American professional, who is now in France, and who recently met with a mishap while practising, has been communicated with, and is expected to arrive in the course of a few weeks with some representative foreign racing men. In the races to be run the prizes will be distributed as follows: $100 to first, $50 to second, $35 to third, and $15 to fourth. It is intended to ask the L. A. W. to assume jurisdiction over the professional events. Should the league refuse it is likely that the old National Cycling Association of America will take charge. It is known that Chairman Gideon, of the Racing Board of the L. A. W., and several of the leading officials of that organization, favor professional races, and it is believed that they will look after the new professional interests.

Two prominent riders will turn professionals today, and they will start in the races at Philadelphia. According to T. W. Eck, all the first Class B men of the country will jump immediately after the National meet at Asbury Park. A. E. Welnig, of Buffalo, who will change his colors today, is said to be the fastest Class A man in New York. He holds the fifty-mile competition road record, and he is a fast man at almost any distance. Patrick O'Connor, of Bofton, is a Class B man, and he has been in this country about a year and a half. He was the champion amateur of Ireland, and he will go abroad with Johnson in August.

THE ALUMNI RECEPTION.

CLOSING ANNUAL EVENT OF THE BOROUGH PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Clarence Murphy Elected to the Presidency of the Association—An Evening of Pleasure.

A closing and pleasing annual event in North Plainfield school life is the reception which is given by the alumni association. A large number of the members, including the '95 graduates, gathered in the school Friday evening and thoroughly enjoyed the occasion.

The hall was prettily trimmed with blue, white, purple and pink bunting, and well arranged through the rooms were several banquet lamps that shed a soft glow on the charming young women and their gowns, which combined to present a picture of beauty, while the young men were gallant in their attention to their fair partners. President John McLaughlin called the meeting to order and the roll was called by Secretary Walter Raynolds.

It showed that many whose names were called were missing. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved, after which Robert Clark and Clarence Murphy, who were appointed a committee to arrange a constitution, reported through Clarence Murphy. He read the constitution which had been prepared, and it was adopted as a whole.

The nominating committee then presented the following names for officers for the ensuing year: President, Clarence Murphy; first vice-president, Walter Place; second vice-president, John Steiner; secretary, Robert Clark; treasurer, Roswell Loizeaux. The secretary cast ballots for those named, and they were chosen unanimously.

President McLaughlin on retiring from office made a few remarks thanking all for their faithfulness.

The new president then took his his seat, and thanked all for the honor conferred.

Miss Alice Barlow rendered a pleasing instrumental solo, which was followed with a tenor solo by Robert Clark. Both received hearty applause, as did also the violin solo by Edward Waring, and the soprano solo by Miss Alice Carroll.

The rest of the evening was then devoted to dancing, for which excellent music was furnished by Rogers.

Delightful refreshments were served during the evening, and it was rather early in the morning when the young people left for their homes.

REJOICED OVER A DEATH.

STERLING PEOPLE WERE BITTER AGAINST MURDERER BERGMAN.

Built Bonfires and Shot Off Fire-Works When the Announcement Came that He Was Dead.

The hanging of August Bergman at Morristown on Thursday noon was followed at Sterling, five miles from this city, with a general rejoicing among the silk mill employes who constitute the inhabitants of that little hamlet.

It was there that the murder of his brother over the nonpayment of a $2 loan was committed by Bergman. The murdered man was an employe of the silk mills and was very popular among the other workmen. All through the trial of Bergman for the murder they were very bitter against him, and when the news reached Sterling Thursday afternoon that Bergman had expiated his crime on the gallows, there was a general rush to celebrate the event.

The 300 employers of the silk mill hustled around and procured old boxes and wood to build an immense bonfire and around this a general time of rejoicing was had. The available fire arms of the town were brought into use and the air fill with noise made by firing them off. The village store had procured a big stock of fire works for the Fourth of July trade, but the stock was soon exhausted by the purchases of the celebrators.

The annual century run of the Metropolitan Association of Cycling Clubs will take place on July 28th. The route will be from Weehawken to New Brunswick, returning via Belleville, Orange, Plainfield and Metuchen, nearly every mile of which is over splendid macadam roads. A silver watchcharm will be given to all survivors. Entries can be made with A. Stahl, 47 Warren street. There will be no less than thirty clubs represented on this run.

It is stated on good authority that there will be no professional league formed this season. But by the beginning of next season a professional league will be formed, with all the most prominent class B riders in it and with the leading manufacturers of wheels at its back. The National Assembly, at its meeting next February, will pass an amendment providing for a professional class, to be known as class C, and over which the racing board will have control.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Did Pawnbroking Without a License.

Arthur Levy, a jeweller at Elizabethport, has disappeared, and the goods in his store on First street have been smuggled away. Levy is wanted to answer a charge made against him of carrying on a pawnbrokerage business without a license. A woman named Hallfester complained to the police that she pawned a gold ring with Levy for fifty cents and afterward was unable to get it when she called to redeem the trinket. Levy saying he had melted it up for old gold.

A New Business Block.

It is understood that Powlinson & Jones, the West Front street furniture dealers, have purchased of O. M. Hetfield of Dunellen the vacant lot on East Front street just east of Marsh, Ayres & Co.'s place of business. The lot has 43 feet frontage and is 210 feet deep, and the purchase price is said to have been $200 per front foot. A large three-story, modernly equipped building will be erected which will be utilized by Powlinson & Jones for their business.

Somerset Freeholders Refuse.

The board of freeholders of Somerset county at their meeting on Wednesday at Somerville, refused by a vote of six to four to grant the application of the property owners for the macadamizing of Mountain avenue under the State road act. The law, it is said, is compulsory, and the freeholders will yet have to grant the demand of the applicants.

To Combine in the Parade.

Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., will combine with Miantanomoh Tribe No. 118, I. O. R. M., in the Fourth of July parade. They have secured the Lincoln Post Fife and Drum Corps, of Newark, which is probably the best in the State.

—Fire escapes have been erected on the Babcock building.

Flemington and the Fourth.

Plainfield is to have a huge Fourth of July celebration in which all societies and business men will join. There will be a parade, games, and fireworks in the evening. It is some years now since Somerville has been awake enough to do anything of the sort.—Somerset Democrat.

Plainfield, although much larger than Flemington, proposes "to have a huge Fourth of July celebration in which all societies and business men will join." While Plainfield and all the surrounding towns are to enjoy themselves on that great National day, Flemington, poor, helpless, newspaper-ridden Flemington, has to remain in the background, "for fear," as the Bound Brook Chronicle alleges, "that everybody will get drunk." And this is the County Seat of Hunterdon county! Shame! Shame!—Hunterdon Gazette.

A Needed Improvement at Pond's.

For a long time the Pond Tool Machine Works have had their own system of fire protection about their building, including water pipes, hydrants and hose. It was the calculation when it was put in to have it uniform with the city system, but by an error the fire plugs were a size too small to permit the use of the regular city connections. To overcome this a graduated connection was carried by each hose cart for the special use at Pond's if ever found necessary. But all this inconvenience will now be overcome for the system at the tool works is being equipped with the same size as is used by the city. This will greatly lessen the risk of a fire getting much headway in the valuable plant.

Coming Happy Event.

Miss Nellie Moran who for the past five years has been the efficient and accomodating clerk at Linke's on West Front street, will be married on Wednesday evening next by the Rev. Father Smyth of St. Mary's R. C. church to Thomas Cummerford. Mr. Cummerford is employed at the Potter Press Works.

BOROUGH GRADUATES.

Brilliant Audience Gather To Hear the Exercises.

A. M. POWELL DELIVERS AN ADDRESS.

Recitations by Misses Woolston and French, Who Give Evidence of Careful Training and Study—President McCutchen Presented the Diplomas in a Few Appropriate Words.

That North Plainfield has an institution of which she is and may be proud was evidenced last Thursday when a large and brilliant audience gathered to witness the commencement of many years of earnest effort, high and lofty ambitions, and a hopefulness that was impressive. It was the twelfth annual graduating exercises of the North Plainfield Public School, that was held in Warren chapel at eight o'clock.

The scholars of the school marched in to the inspiring music rendered by Miss Randolph, the pianist, and took seats on the platform, which was also occupied by Principal C.E. Boss, President Samuel St. John McCutchen and the members of the Board of Education, together with members of the borough council.

The school sang "The Holy City," by Adams; and "Blow, Gentle Breeze," by Booth; under the direction of Wm. E. MacClymont. The rendition of both was highly creditable and showed excellent training.

Principal Boss then introduced Miss Adah E. Woolston, the first graduate, who recited Longfellow's beautiful story, "A Roman Legend." Everyone listened with pleasure to the rendition, which was perfect. Especially noteworthy was the clear enunciation of the speaker and the ease and grace with which she gave every line. The next graduate was Miss Maude A. French, who gave "The Lost Galleon" by Harte. It was a masterly effort, and the clear, strong, voice of the speaker could be heard in every portion of the building. The manner in which Miss French rendered her selection gave evidence of careful study that brought out all the fine details of the subject.

Both graduates received flattering applause for their accomplishments. After the singing of a sprightly song, "On Life's Journey," by Veazie, Mr. Boss introduced Aaron M. Powell, who spoke in part as folows:

Members of the class of '95 I congratulate you heartily. I sympathize with you warmly, knowing that feeling with which you are stirred. You came to the halls of our schools under certain conditions of mind and thought. You cannot go back to those conditions. You think now of life and responsibilities. Your education is never finished, but the graduate who has completed his or her task at this point is to be commended. This is no ordinary school. Your opportunities are quite beyond the ordinary. What you were, is the past; what you are, is the present. Education changes the outlook in life very much. Let me illustrate this. On one occasion I went out for a walk in the country with a friend, who was somewhat of an expert on microscopic investigations. It was early one summer morning just after a shower, and as we walked along the road we passed several pools of water. In one of these my friend caught a butterfly, and holding it a few minutes let it go. I noticed in his hand a very small pointed instrument, and with that he separated a very small portion of dust from the butterfly and fixing it on a powerful glass I looked and to my surprise saw what seemed to be a perfect feather with beautiful colors. With the naked eye I would have passed along without that knowledge. What that glass did education does for us in the larger sense.

A few years ago I was driving with a friend through the Catskills to the Mountain House, and we saw the beautiful valley of the Hudson, a wonderful picture of natural beauty. We were overtaken in a thunder shower and drove in a barn. There we met a good kind-hearted farmer. He told us many interesting things and we told him who we were. As closely as he had lived to the mountain he had never been on the summit. In the springtime they had taken a very large range to the Mountain House, and it required six horses to draw it up the steep grade. That fact interested him and he said he was going to the top to see that range. It was the measure of the limit of view in his case. Thus we see that education enlarges the outlook.

James Russell Lowell once said: "Education means not only the opportunity to earn our daily bread, but after we earn it we know how to sweeten it."

Ralph Waldo Emerson was the greatest philosopher the country has ever known, and in his boyhood he struggled hard for an education. He acted as a waiter in college in order to get enough money to get an education.

Whittier, whom it was my privilege to know and love, was a poor Massachusetts farmer boy, who only had three months of school in his boyhood days. A friend taught him shoemaking and in that way he secured enough money to gain a little knowledge. I am afraid these young men here tonight have never known what such an effort is. Whittier was twenty years old before he owned a copy of Shakespeare. "Ally yourself to some great cause" was the poet's great motto.

Louise M. Olcott was a poor girl, working as a servant. Her first writings were refused, but today her books are read the world over. We must make the most of opportunity.

My closing thought is this, that there is too much tendency nowadays to pleasure. There is too great a fondness for it. We read a few days ago in the papers that the costliest prize offered at Yale College for the highest attainment in a certain branch was not offered because the professor had discovered that there was not a student in the college who was deserving of it.

Does this reflect on the time spent in playing football baseball and other games.

A little later we read in the papers about the seniors at Columbia College who enjoyed a smoker and dinner at Sherry's, New York, and the latter probably included sherry. Students are much the worse for such indulgencies.

The New Jersey Legislature investigating committee shows what we need in Jersey, and it's the coming men and women who will be called upon. In Colorado men and women are placed on an equal footing, and may the time come when this shall be the case in New Jersey.

At the conclusion of Mr. Powell's address, President McCutchen in a few well chosen words presented, on behalf of the Board of Education and the citizens of the borough, the graduates with their diplomas. The school then sang "The Song of the Vikings," and thus passed into history another very successful and profitable event.

The following is the names of the graduates and subjects of essays:

Carolyn F. Barnes	Influence of Books

AT THE NORTHFIELD CAMP.

A Delightful Outing Which Can Be Secured at Small Cost.

The special Northfield number of The Bulletin contains the following which will be of interest to the members of the Y. M. C. A. in this city:

While the regular association camp does not open until July 9th, arrangements have been made to accommodate a party from Brooklyn during the students' conference, which will be held June 28th to July 7th. This conference is a gathering of over five hundred students from colleges in all parts of the world, and is one of the inspiring and interesting events of the entire summer. On account of the smaller number to be present during this week, the expense will be somewhat larger than after the encampment is regularly opened. The special rate of $4.50 to Northfield will be in force during this period, and the cost of board while in camp will not exceed $1.00 per day. A portion of the party attending this conference will wheel from New Haven to Northfield; leaving New York, Thursday, July 27th, by the New Haven boat. The trip from New Haven will take the party up the beautiful valley of the Connecticut and will occupy the greater portion of Friday and Saturday. There will be no fast riding, and in case of unfavorable weather, train can be taken at any time. After the close of the conference a party will probably ride to Lake Champlain, and thence via Lake George, Saratoga and Albany return to New York. This party will be accompanied by Secretary Foot, of the Bedford Branch. The Fourth of July falling on Thursday, the week will be broken up for business, which makes it especially convenient for a number to attend the conference for the entire session. It will also make an inexpensive and delightful holiday vacation for those who can take the boat the evening of the third and remain over the following Sunday. This trip can be taken for less than $10.

The Advance of Woman.

Apart from any question of right, would it be for the best interests of civilization to grant women a wider sphere of activity? The trend and current of the social evolution is surely in the direction of larger liberty for all, in the degree that they are able to use it. It is in the direction of the removal of barriers and needless restraints. Every attempt at such removal in the past has been greeted by loud prophecies of disaster. The aroused watch-dogs of church and state have started in full cry upon the track of the innovator with angry yelpings of alarm. But that what was might have been expected, and should frighten no one. We all inherit a residuum of antediluvian sentiments which remain suspended in our minds like mud in water and interfere with the clearness of our thinking. It is only when it has had time to settle, and we recognize it for what it is, that we gain full command of our intellects. Now, I do not pretend as yet to have full command of mine; but, for all that, I seem to have a few star-gleams of intuition which manage to struggle through the turbid medium of antiquated feeling.—H. H. Boyesen, in July Lippincott's.

More of An American Than Ever.

The Daily Press has received the following letter from Peter B. Wright, dated June 8th at Berlin, Germany:

Just a line to let you know of my safe arrival here. I have visited Paris, London, Ireland, Scotland and Holland. From here I go up the Rhine to Lepsele, from there to Switzerland, Norway, Sweeden, Austria, back to London, Paris, and then home. I have been very successful and have enjoyed every step of the way; but I am more of an American than ever, and I would not give up my own land for any other on earth.

CITY COUNCIL LEGISLATES.

BIDS RECEIVED FOR BUILDING MAIN OUTLET SEWER.

Ordinance Authorizing the Purchase of Land for Sewage Beds Adopted—Netherwood Granted a License.

Matters pertaining to sewers was the principal business transacted at the meeting of the Council Wednesday night. Councilmen Westphal, Moore, Bird, Ginna, Fisk, Dumont and President See were present.

The ordinance authorizing the construction of the main outlet sewer from Front street street and Grant avenue to the sewage beds was read, at the conclusion of which the president announced that bids would be received for the construction of the sewer. The following firms presented bids: Michael Honan & Son., Chester, Pa.; Patrick J. Plunkett, Jersey City; Charles B. Walton, Trenton; Charles T. Moore, Lebanon, Pa.; Martin McNamara and Carlon T. Bride, Washington, D. C.; John Marsden, Utica.

The lowest bid was about $14,000, the next about $800 higher, and the highest about double the lowest.

After the bids had been read the ordinance authorizing the purchase of the land for the construction of sewage beds was given its final reading, and, on motion of Mr. Fisk, adopted. All the councilmen voted yes.

An ordinance asking for proposals for making house connections was introduced, read the first time, and ordered advertised. July 8th is the day set for receiving bids.

The Plainfield Gas and Electric Light Company petitioned for permission to connect their exhaust pipes from their condensing engines to the under drains of the sewer on Madison avenue. The petition was granted, with the proviso that the arrangement should cease if at the end of the year it should create vapors which would be injurious to the health of the city.

Andrew J. Gavett, constructing engineer, reported that Cook & Co. had completed their sewer contract, except in cleaning up the streets and completing some other little details. Cook & Co. presented a statement which showed that they had made arrangements with Street Commissioner Meeker to make the necessary repairs and charge to them. The document was referred to the street committee with instruction to see that the arrangement was carried out in a satisfactory manner.

Two additional fire hydrants were ordered on East Front street, Councilman Westphal voting no.

Chairman Moore of the license committee recommended that a license for an inn and tavern be granted to John Spitler of the Hotel Netherwood. Adopted.

The application of John Spitler for a license to sell liquors at the Hotel Netherwood was granted, Councilman Frost voting no.

An auctioneer's license was granted to William E. Taylor.

Mr. Dumont moved that the specifications for the proposals for house connections be printed. Adopted.

Two bills for $1,470.58 and $525.09 from Cook & Co. were ordered paid.

CRESCENT WHEELMEN MEET.

Fourth of July Matters Was the Principal Business Discussed.

There was a fair attendance of members at the meeting of the Crescent Wheelmen last evening when the Fourth of July celebration was talked over and discussed.

The committee on games reported progress; also that the entry blanks were now ready. The clubhouse committee stated that they had interviewed the members of the Plainfield Bicycle Club and that the latter wanted $50 per month for 100 members and $15 additional for every 100 above that number. The Crescents decided to let the committee advise with Mrs. Ulrich with a view of getting the best terms.

The committee on float for Fourth of July reported that work was progressing satisfactorily. An adjournment was then made to Wednesday evening, June 26th.

An Estate Settled.

The trouble over the settlement of the estate of the late Fritz Pounnerehire, of Rahway, was finally adjusted yesterday in the Orphans' Court at Elizabeth. A bill of exceptions to the accounting of the executors, Alderman Lohmiller and Mr. Helmstader, had been filed with the Court by Lawyer Hunt on behalf of some of the heirs. Mrs. Pounnerehire, the widow, turned over certain property to the executors to make good the amount in dispute, and the objections were in consequence withdrawn.

Railway Employes Picnic.

The following is the committee of street railway employes picnic at Vail's grove, on Wednesday, July 17th: H. Martin, J. J. McCormick, M. Higgins, M. Hipp, H. J. McCormick, M. Nevins and W. Smalley. Any information concerning the picnic can be had from them.

FESTIVAL AT HOLY CROSS.

A PLEASANT AND PROFITABLE CHURCH AFFAIR.

Parish House Trimmed in An Artistic Manner, in Which Attractive Young Ladies Sell With Profit.

Everyone present at the festival given by the young women of Holy Cross church Thursday in the parish house can congratulate themselves, for it was one of those charming events that always prove a delight to those attending, and the affair last evening was no exception to this established rule.

Artful hands had made the already pretty room resemble fairyland by the judicious use of yellow bunting which was the prevailing color, and this, with the pretty gowns worn by the fair ones, presented a scene well worth seeing.

Around the room were arranged tables that were inviting enough to capture patrons who very willingly paid the price asked to secure the excellent home-made cake and strawberry lemonade that was on sale, while two kinds of ice cream was sufficient to satisfy the most particular.

The attendance was large, and it was a buying crowd that rewarded the young women for their earnest efforts.

During the evening a "pound" auction was started, and packages neatly tied up, containing a pound of "nobody knew what till they opened", brought good prices. The purchasers after examining their packages found groceries, match boxes, dolls, etc., and nobody could object for the proceeds were to be devoted to the Sunday-school. Mr. Bartling filled the position of auctioneer in a satisfactory manner to all.

Those who arranged the affair were: Miss Anna Murphy, Miss Warman, Miss Agnes Smith, Miss Ada Bartling, Miss Emmons, Miss Weston, Miss Fountain. The last four named had charge of the candy, while the others looked after the cake, lemonade and ice cream. The whole affair was a complete success in every respect, and is a credit to the young women who planned it.

PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT.

Members of the Church of Heavenly Rest Have a Pleasant Time.

A pleasing entertainment was given in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Clinton avenue, last night, which was arranged by Mrs. Lewis.

The entire programme was well rendered and received, several encores being given. It was as follows:

Piano duet—Dance of the Fairies.	The Misses Graves
Vocal solo—In the Dreamy Twilight.	Miss Yaeger
Recitation—Paul Revere's Ride	Mrs. Lyons
Tenor solo—Tell Her I Love Her So.	Wm. Tallamy
Cornet solo—Home So Blest	Mr. Brown
Vocal solo—Far Away From Home and Mother	Mrs. Brown.
Recitation—Barnyard Song.	Mrs. Chas. Steiner
Tenor solo—Beautiful Land on High.	Horace J. Martin
Vocal duet—Home all Beautiful.	Mr. and Mrs. Brown

After the entertainment ice cream was sold and a substantial sum realized therefrom.

MR. BARRETT OBJECTS.

He Refuses to Allow the City to Use the Smock Farm Until Next April.

J. Y. Barrett, who has a lease extending to April 1st, 1896, for the Smock farm, which has been purchased by the city for sewage beds, told a Daily Press representative this morning that he would not allow the construction of the main outlet sewer on the land, as long as his lease was in force, unless paid for the privilege. He also stated that he would not permit any more test pits to be made on the land unless he was given a bonus of $600 for the surrender of his lease.

On this farm is the Coriell family cemetery, the headstones over some of the graves dating back 120 years. Whether or not the Coriell family will permit the removal of the remains involves a delicate question.

Tore His Cheek Into Shreds.

Patrick Crowman, a vicious character, recently released from the State Prison, assaulted Philip Honeyman, a prominent citizen of Somerville, Monday night. Honeyman was stretched unconscious by a blow on the head from Crowman's fist. John McCarthy, a bystander, who went to Honeyman's assistance, was set upon by Crowman, who encircled McCarthy's neck with his arms and tore his cheek into shreds with his teeth. A large crowd surrounded the infuriated man and would have done him violence but for the arrival of the police.

DETAILS OF THE CELEBRATION.

Executive Committee Meet and Make Further Arrangements.

The Fourth of July executive committee met last evening and instructed the printing committee to advertise for bids for the privilege of selling official badges.

It was reported that several bids had been received for fire-work but nothing had been decided upon.

The collection committee reported indirectly that nearly $1,000 had been subscribed and collected.

Drake's band of Elizabeth was secured for the celebration and a communication was received from their leader saying that there would be twenty pieces in the band.

The contract for building stands in the city park was given to Daniel J. Wilson, and Ira Riker kindly loaned seventy-five camp chairs for the use of those who sit on the stand.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL FESTIVAL.

Trinity Reformed Little Workers Reap Considerable Profit.

The festival held in the Voehl building, on East Front street, Thursday afternoon and evening, was a great success.

The young girls of the Trinty Reformed church Sunday-school who planned it are working earnestly to secure money for the new Sunday-school room, and they succeeded admirably in this affair. The sum of $40.98 was realized from the sales, and nearly everything was sold.

The store looked very pretty decorated with ferns, flowers, flags and lanterns, and then there wss a choice display of articles on sale.

During the evening a gypsy happened in, gorgeously costumed, and did a rushing business with a grab-bag.

The little girls have won praise and commendation for their efforts and they are highly pleased with the result.

Trouble at Rutgers.

Dr. John Jacob Cooper, the professor of logic and mental philosophy at Rutgers college, was caricatured by the class of '95 in their recent play, when a student taking the name of "J. K. Hooper" was made up to resemble to a nicety the professor. Dr. Cooper did not see the play, but was told what occurred. He had previously had trouble with some of the members of the senior class, and took umbrage at the affair. When the diplomas for the graduates were presented to him for signature, he declined to sign them, and the diplomas do not yet bear his name. The members of the class are greatly exercised over the matter, and threaten to take some action in concert.

Tracking Escaped Prisoners.

Eight men, who are supposed to be the prisoners who escaped from the Middlesex county jail in New Brunswick over a week ago, were discovered in a cave in the woods about one mile north of Somerville yesterday. A posse was organized to capture the crowd, but a sentinel who was on the lookout saw the posse coming and gave the alarm. All the eight men got away. It is believed that they have not gone far, and are said to be in the woods near where they were first seen. The authorities are keeping a sharp lookout to see if they can again see the gang.

A NAGGING WOMAN.

DR. EDSON DEFENDS HIMSELF FROM CRITICS.

There Are Nagging Men, of Course, but They Occupy Less Exacting Positions. The Effect of Nagging Upon Children and Upon the Peace of the Family.

Dr. Edson ranges the husbands of naggers in three classes. Men of the first class are incited to brutality and violence. Husbands of the second class avoid their homes and seek solace in clubs and saloons. Those of the third class, who remain devoted to their naggers, are usually of nervous temperament, and some have been driven insane by exposure to continual fault-finding, which is more injurious than overwork. But if the irritable nagging of the woman is a consequence of ill health, when the husband understands this fact the nagging often ceases to have any injurious effect on him. The case is different with children. Nagging is equally injurious to their nervous system, whether the mother is an invalid or has no such excuse.

A vivid recollection of a visit to a summer resort is of an irritable, invalid mother and her unhappy, harassed boy. She nagged at him in the dining room till the poor child lost all appetite. One morning the father came down alone and explained that mother was not well enough to come to breakfast. Whereon the boy, with childlike frankness, exclaimed, "Oh, I'm so glad!" Then, seeing his father's reproving glance, he explained: "You know, papa, I'm not glad she's sick; but—but I do enjoy my breakfast so much more when she's not here." The woman was an egotist; her own ailments were her continual theme, and the comfort of her husband and child was wholly disregarded.

"I think mamma doesn't like me, auntie," said another sensitive child. "Oh, if she would only sometimes seem satisfied with me, and speak to me as you do to Nellie! I used to try so hard to please her, but it isn't any good; for no matter what I do she always thinks it is wrong."

One sees nervous, nagging women in charge of schools and must heartily pity them, for they are obliged to earn their living; nevertheless, they are ruining the dispositions of the children; and, in spite of almost frantic efforts, cannot maintain discipline. Oft reiterated complaint ceases to have remedial effect.

A handsome woman, whose face bore traces of a sweeter disposition in girlhood, was unhappily married to a drunkard. With her large family, small means and the misery of seeing the man return night after night in a disgusting condition of intoxication she had a heavy burden to bear. But she did not rail at the man; she feared driving him to lower depths. The results of her disappointment and worry were visited on the unfortunate children. She was not by nature a motherly woman. The children came into the world without a welcome and were made to realize it. Shaken, scolded, unreasonably accused, they had no home in the true sense of the word, and each took the earliest opportunity to leave the parents and go out into the world.

There are nagging men as well as nagging women, but as the fathers are usually absent from the home many hours of the day, they have less opportunity to destroy family peace. It is said that "the mother holds the key of the soul and stamps the coin of character." We remember Cowper's lines to his mother's picture: "Oh, that those lips had language! Life has passed with me but roughly since I heard thee last." Memories of a mother's sweet voice have led back wandering feet to paths of righteousness but harsh words of other mothers have driven the children to the broad ways of destruction, as did a certain widow who railed continually at her children. They feared her when they were little; but as they grew older they gave back railing for railing; and every son of that mother was laid in a drunkard's grave. A little lad made desperate by the nagging of both parents ran away, crossed the sea as a stowaway, and found refuge with a relative, who obtained permission to bring him up. Under the rule of his parents he had been deceitful, driven to falsehood through fear. When loved and trusted he returned love and trust, and developed a fine character.

In another home the nagging of the mother was repeated in the children. Old grievances were dwelt upon, magnified and brought forward at most inopportune moments, and there was a continual round of petty faultfinding and retort. But a realization of her responsibility came to the mother; she controlled the querulous words and turned them into gentle ones. The children were puzzled. They did not expect the new condition to last, but it did last, and now it is rare to hear an impatient word in that house from any of its members.

One may make excuse for the nervous condition of invalids; the irritability that results from sleepless nights and long continued suffering is difficult to control, but much of the uncontrolled irritability of invalids is the outcome of self pity and lack of consideration for others. The development of egotism and selfishness in some natures is one of the evils of invalidism.

Maude—I really believe Cholly is going to get married.

Ester—What makes you think so?

Maude—I hear he has joined a cooking school.—Life.

A washerwoman applied for help to a gentleman, who gave her a note to the manager of a certain club. It read as follows:

"Dear Mr. X.: This woman wants washing."

Very shortly the answer came back:

"Dear sir: I dare say she does, but I don't fancy the job."—Tit-Bits.

CYCLING COMMENT.

A. H. Barnett has been training at the Crescent Oval for the last few days.

J. Fred MacDonald, the uptown grocer, takes a spin on a wheel occasionally.

Wesley Abbott and Howard Corlies will sail for their cycling trip through Europe on Saturday.

George F. Brown punctured the rear tire on his wheel a few days ago which necessitated his riding another wheel till it could be repaired.

A prominent cyclist in Plainfield says that the rarity of Plainfield air is caused by the immense quantity used in filling pneumatic tires on bicycles.

A long-distance rider passed through Plainfield yesterday afternoon well provided for any emergency. The tires on his wheel were single-tube, and he carried an extra one strapped to his handle-bars.

Plainfield has a speedy little rider in William M. McCutchen. He is now training for the races at Paterson on July 3d and 4th; and is also expected to enter in the National meet at Asbury Park. When riding a flying quarter, without pace-makers, on the Crescent Oval, he made the very fast time of 27 3-5 seconds.

To the physically frail man and woman, boy and girl, we would offer a word of caution regarding hard and long rides. Never mind if you cannot ride a century, you can ride ten miles with much enjoyment, and you will probably remain on earth much longer by selecting the shorter distance, and get a bigger reception from the cycling angels when you die.—American Wheelman.

Johnson, in the event of failing to meet Zimmerman in a series of match races this summer, has been laying plans to take in all the big amateur meetings during June and July and earn a nice revenue by riding exhibitions. He has also aspirations to go to Cologne and represent America in the professional events at the international championship meet. In the absence of Zimmerman, who starts for Australia in August, no man is better fitted to represent this country in the professional championships, and it is doubtful if any of the foreign professionals are in Johnson's class.

With the thousands of new recruits in cycling, the touring season will doubtless be unusually active. It is generally the case that the new recruit is seized with a burning desire to take a long trip awheel, and sooner or later finds himself with a party bound for some point of attraction, say a hundred miles away. Such journeys invigorate the mind and the body as well, if taken in a leisurely manner. The cost is small, well within the means of the average clerk, and if he fails to reap a harvest of health and recreation it is his own fault. A vacation spent awheel riding through the country is truly a good investment.—New York Times.

The annual century run of the Associated Cycling Clubs of New Jersey, in connection with the National League meet at Asbury Park, will take place July 6th, starting at five p. m. from Broad street, Newark. The Asbury Park Wheelmen have presented to the association two solid silver cups, one valued at $100, to be awarded to the club bringing through the greatest number of survivors, and one valued at $50 for the club bringing through the second greatest number of survivors. Besides this the association will present five handsome banners, one to the club from Pennsylvania bringing through the greatest number of survivors from that State, one to the club from New York or Brooklyn who do likewise for their State, two to the clubs in the association first and second, and one for a club from any state not eligible to compete for the above. For the benefit of the New York, Brooklyn, and Long Island riders a boat leaves foot of Barclay street, New York, at 4:35 a.m., July 6th, and connects with train for Newark, at Hoboken, which will be prepared to take on wheels. This train arrives in time for the start in Newark. Carl von Lengerke, Captain of the South Orange Field Club Cyclers, will act as captain of the run this year, and will have for his assistance Messrs. George C. Wheeler of the Westchester League of New York, and Joseph Estoclet of Philadelphia, to act as pacemakers.

To Discuss Good Government.

Wm. VanSickel and "Tony" Lusardi went to Philadelphia today on business.

Fine Pianos on the St. Louis.

The new steamship St. Louis, of the American line, has among her luxurious furnishings three pianos, made by the Mason & Hamlin company, one in mahogany (Chippendale) one in cherry, and one in enamel, white and gold. They are of the finest make and add greatly to the beauty of the furnishings. The same company has orders for three pianos of similar make for the new steamship St. Paul, of the same line.

The newly-elected officers will be installed at their first regular meeting in July.

The Laws Enforced Here.

The New York Times of yesterday publishes a column and a half description of a century run through New Jersey towns from New York to Philadelphia, and in speaking of Plainfield says:

> If riding on Sunday, do not try to find any refreshment—especially liquid—as the blue laws are rigidly enforced. Rather ride along until two miles past the town. But an excellent place to stop for dinner at Plainfield can be found at the Albion Hotel, on the road out of town.

St. Mary's Excursion.

The excursion of St. Mary's church and Sunday-school will go to the celebrated Glen Island on Wednesday, July 24th.

Edward Petrie, who is in business at Bridgport, Conn., spent Sunday with his mother on East Sixth street.

A. P. A. AND THE SCHOOLS

A Circular Sent to the Elizabeth Board of Education.

The Newark News last night published the following from Elizabeth:

The members of the American Protective Association here are taking a hand in the election of officers by the Board of Education. This morning every member of the new board which takes control next month received the following circular:

"Dear Sir—Council No. 25, of the American Protective Association of New Jersey, has adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in our judgment, the position of Secretary of the Board of Education should be held by a man of unquestioned patriotism, who is not allied with any system that is opposed to our National, non-sectarian free public schools, and we would therefore respectfully request every member of the Board of Education of the city of Elizabeth to vote for the appointment of either Henry F. Robinson or some equally competent, loyal and patriotic citizen.

"Resolved, That a copy of this be sent to each member of the new School Board.

"H. W. C. CHURCHILL, Secretary."

The present secretary of the Board of Education, William H. Ryan, who has held the office about eight years, is a Catholic. Henry F. Robinson was formerly a member of the board, and is said to be affiliated with the A. P. A.

Better Get Married.

A Plainfield young man went out walking with his best girl Saturday night, and in the course of their travels the girl's father appeared, and administered a small dose of displeasure by punching the young man in the face. The down-hearted couple sought a policeman for advice, and were told that the only thing to do was to either get married or separate.

Will Be a Great Feature.

It is intended to mount the old fire bell, which did service so many years in the tower on the West Second street house, on a wagon for the Fourth of July parade, where it will again ring forth the sounds that will carry "the oldest citizen" back to the time when he pulled the fire apparatus. Boice, Runyon & Co. will furnish the wagon and horses for the parade.

While in Topeka last March, E. T. Barber, a prominent newspaper man of La Cygne, Kansas, was taken with cholera morbus very severely. The night clerk at the hotel where he was stopping happened to have a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and gave him three doses which relieved him and he thinks saved his life. Every family should keep this remedy in their home at all times. No one can tell how soon it may be needed. It costs but a trifle and may be the means of saving much suffering and perhaps the life of some member of the family. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

I have two little grandchildren who are teething this hot summer weather and are troubled with bowel complaint. I give them Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and it acts like a charm. I earnestly recommend it for children with bowel troubles. I was myself taken with a severe attack of bloody flux, with cramps and pains in my stomach, one-third of a bottle of this remedy cured me. Within twenty-four hours I was out of bed and doing my housework. Mrs. W. L. Dunagan, Bonaqua, Hickman Co., Tenn.

While at Peekskill, N. Y., Mr. J. A. Scriven, a prominent manufacturer of New York City, purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Such good results were obtained from its use that he sent back to the druggist from whom he had obtained it for two more bottles of the same remedy. When you have a cough or cold give this preparation a trial and like Mr. Scriven you will want it when again in need of such a medicine. It is a remedy of great worth and merit. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North aves, T. S. Armstrong, Manager.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube be restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destored forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflammed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness, caused by catarrh, that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

NOTABLE MASONS VISIT ANCHOR.

A Banquet Served and Profitable Time Enjoyed.

A regular communication of Anchor Lodge, F. and A. M., was held in their rooms in the Babcock building last evening, when the third degree was conferred on one candidate. After the business session a supper was served in the banquet room. There was a large attendance of members from Elizabeth, New Brunswick, Rahway, Westfield, Somerville, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Washington. Among the officers present were: M. W. P. G. M. Moore, R. W. D. D. G. M. Anthony Shroeder, P. D. D. G. M. Stephens, Tillou, Sheppard and Freeman.

Track Athletics Killed By Professionalism.

The athletic clubs themselves have helped to destroy interest in ordinary field sports. For many years they made the giving of athletic games the whole purpose of their existence, and finding them popular, they multiplied them to replenish their treasuries. They pursued the idea that the winning of prizes by men wearing their club colors meant prosperity. They invented a system of athletic memberships, that signified anything that they desired it to mean, from free initiations, remitted dues, gratuitous board and lodging, to a business situation or cold cash, and they offered valuable prizes that could quite readily be converted into money. The consequences were inevitable; the tone of track athletics became so cheap and so common that the better portion of the club membership held aloof from it.—From "Life at the Athletic Clubs" by Duncan Edwards, in the July Scribner.

A JUNE TEA.

Miss May Shreve Entertains in Honor of Miss MacCracken.

A delightful tea was given by Miss Shreve, of Grove street, for her friend, Miss Mac Cracken, of New York, Saturday last from four until seven. Miss Shreve was assisted by her sister, Miss May Shreve, Miss Foster, of New York, Miss Rodman, and the Misses Haviland. Mrs. Deuse Van Vliet and Miss Bessie Day presided at the table where ices were served. Miss Munger dispensed lemonade in the music room. The table decoratives were pink roses, with an effective arrangement of pink ribbons alternating with ropes of smilax suspended from the chandelier. More than one hundred guests were present. Among other out-of-town guests were: Howard Foster, of New York, Cleveland Childs, of East Orange, and Messrs. John and Henry Wallace, of Philadelphia.

Change of High School Teachers.

The many friends of Miss Harriet E. Delano, who has been junior class teacher in the High School, will be sorry to learn that she has severed her connection with the school and will spend the next year in rest and study. Her position as Junior teacher will be occupied by Miss Mary Grace Caldwell, of Concord, N. H. Miss Caldwell is a graduate of Welesley and has taught already for five years.

This is No Fish Story.

E. P. Thorn and a party of friends went to the Raritan river, two miles above Raritan, last week, and Mr. Thorn succeeded in landing the largest small-mouth bass ever caught in this vicinity. It weighed five and a quarter pounds. He presented it to Charley Smith.

Another New Business Block.

Lawyer W. R. Codington, ever on the progressive side of city improvements, has in contemplation the erection of a building on Park avenue, between Laine's barber shop and the building owned by him on the corner of Park avenue and Second street. It will be a handsome structure and a credit to the city.

TALK OF THE BICYCLISTS.

GOSSIPY LOCAL AND NATIONAL ITEMS OF THE GREAT SPORT.

The Double Century Finished With Plainfielders Well Up in Front—Sanger Likely to Be Declared a Professional.

Adam Blair is learning to ride a wheel, and he succeeds admirably.

A. H. Barnett, of Westfield, passed through town Saturday on his wheel, accompanied by two friends.

G. Q. Dolliver, of Manning avenne, is busy evenings learning to ride a bike. His son Charley says if "pop" gets tired wrestling with it, he'll gladly take it off his hands, and ride in less than ten hours after his first trial.

Benjamin Wainright and Joseph Male, both employes of Scott's Press Works, on a five-dollar wager on Saturday last rode a bicycle race over a five-mile course, starting from Scott's in great shape. There were many fellow employes who witnessed the affair, and much excitement prevailed. William Jukes was starter. Wainright won.

There were about twenty-five of the Century riders including the "bloomer" girl who returned from Philadelphia yesterday. They passed through Plainfield about 2:15 in the afternoon, and Frank Smith and John Rickert were among the leaders, and looking as fresh as though they had been out for a short ride. The rest of the party looked exceedingly well.

The Alcyone Cyclers of Elizabeth had a nine-mile road race on Friday night, from Elizabeth to the Wheatsheaf hotel and return. All the contestants but four dropped out. Capt. Harry Hicks was the first man to finish, and for a prize received a handsome gold medal. The referee was David Strauss, of the Alcyones, the starter Chief Consul Robert Gentle, and the timer, E. H. Smith.

The Elizabeth Athletic Club cyclers held their ten-mile handicap road race Saturday afternoon, over the Springfield-Elizabeth course, which is five miles, with a turn, Newton White was the first man in, E. H. Karr was second, Frederick Hedges, third, W. D. Stout, fourth, and Robert Eaton, fifth. There were ten starters, Charles Appley being scratch man. White's handicap was six minutes. A large crowd witnessed the contest.

Notwithstanding all reports to the contrary, the match race between C. M. Murphy and W. C. Sanger will take place at the meet of the Kings County Wheelmen, at the Manhattan Beach track, on Saturday, June 29th. The race will be at one mile, to be run in three heats, the winner of two heats to be declared the winner of the match. Murphy holds the competition record for one mile of 2:01 4-5, made at the Waltham track two weeks ago. Sanger has always been known as Johnson's most formidable rival, and he is also riding in record-breaking shape. A five-hundred-dollar trophy will be given to the winner. Each heat should be a grand struggle from start to finish for the supremacy.

Many prizes received this season by Class B men on the National circuit are said to be far below the advertised value, and a "kick" will soon be made to Chairman Gideon. "Big" Terrill, who comes from California to race in the east, has a diamond which was valued on the programme and entry blanks at $150, and is worth at retail less than half that amount. The American racing men are not novices when it comes to valuing prizes. The racing men are asked to compete at a meet, a grand list of prizes is shown them, and on the strength of this list they take part, good races are run, the crowd is large, the race meet promoters are made wealthy, and the racing men receive for their hard work prizes worth less than half of the value of those shown.—New York Times.

A GOOD WOMAN GONE.

Death of Mrs. Carpenter at the Home of Her Brother, R. G. Horr.

Yesterday morning at half-past ten o'clock there passed away from this earth one of those women whose only work seemed to be to make life happier for those around her. Mrs. Lucina Horr Carpenter died at the home of her brother, Roswell G. Horr, of 808 Park avenue, in the seventy-second year of her age. She was born in Vermont, but had been a resident of Chicago for a number of years, and her only son, Newton Carpenter, is now secretary of the Art Institute of that city.

Mrs. Carpenter was a widow, and had been a sufferer from heart trouble for several years. She came to Plainfield to spend the summer with the hope that the change would do her good. She had been confined to her bed for a week past, but none of the family thought that the end was so near at hand.

Her funeral will take place Thursday in Chicago, and this morning the remains were removed there under the charge of Roswell G. Horr and his daughter, Mrs. F. W. Hebard. Mrs. Horr was unable to go on account of the illness of her daughter.

Mrs. Carpenter was a most estimable woman, active in all charitable works and prominent in the Congregational church of which she was a member, and in her death the poor and needy have lost a kind friend.

W. R. Rollofson has returned home after spending several days with friends at Stephenburg.
